It is impossible to view the immensity, the variety, the harmony, and the beauty of the Universe, without concluding it to be the workmanship of a Being infinitely powerful, wise, and good.

It is impossible to examine the structure of the most inconsiderable plant or animal, without being surpriz'd with such admirable contrivance, as pronounces the author infinitely intelligent, and excludes all suspicion, that it ow'd its origin to blind chance.

THE vegetable world is adjusted with such amazing skill, that each plant, perfect in its own kind, is supported, and propagated, mechanically, by the unerring action of the sun, the air, and the earth where it grows; its seeds, by that mechanism, produce new plants of the same kind; and the herb, that perishes with the season, cloaths the fields with the same livery against the next: that brute matter, inert, and insensible, should be framed so as to perform such wonders, shews wisdom, and power, far beyond the comprehension of the most perfect man.

THE action of the material powers in this system upon the organized body of a plant preserves, and propagates it; its roots shoot out into the soil where it grows, there it finds abundant aliment for perfecting its trunk, and preparing its seeds, and those seeds are dropped where they meet the like encouragement. but it is not so with animals; the most perfect of the kind, left to the direction of material and mechanical powers only, must perish without rearing any succession.

VEGETABLES and animals are so far similar, that both require constant supplies of fresh juices; but in this they differ, that nature mechanically reaches to the one the supply it wants, whereas the other must, by some act of its own, find and fetch it; and therefore in animals, besides matter and mechanism there is an active principle; somewhat, of which we have no conception or knowledge but by its effects, that finds, prepares, and takes in proper nourishment, and determines to the propagation, and preservation of its own species.

By what sort of mechanism this principle acts on, or is affected by, the meer matter to which it is join'd, we cannot at all conceive; but this we see, that it calls all the brute animal creation to those acts that are necessary for self-preservation, and propagating the species; each class of animals is highly industrious to compass these ends; and, if we may judge by what we feel transacting in the brute part of ourselves, there is in them a strong desire to do those acts that are necessary for the support of themselves, and a very sensible pleasure attending the gratification of that desire.

It does not appear to us that plants are sensible of pleasure or pain; whereas animals we know are affected by both. To a plant it is indifferent whether it is supported or not, but to an animal it is not so; it tastes felicity in receiving the necessary supplies, and languishes under want; the pleasure it receives in feeding is the motive to look for food, and it is bribed to support itself by the happiness it meets with in taking in its nourishment; what the plant does necessarily, the animal does from choice, and is highly rewarded, by the pleasure it receives, for every act of its duty in preserving itself, and propagating.

Who can give attention to this œconomy, and at the same time reflect on the profuse supply that nature every where affords, for the support of the infinite numbers of animals, of different kinds, that swarm upon this Globe, without concluding, that overflowing goodness and benevolence is an attribute of the infinitely wise, and powerful, Author of Nature?

In looking over the whole animal creation one sees infinite variety of instincts, and talents, some approaching nearer, some more remote from, those dispositions that are to be met with in man, but all tending to the preservation of the creature possess of them; but it does not appear to us that the sagacity, or discerning, of the Brute goes any further than to its own immediate preservation, and promoting what its instinct leads it to; in this consists the brute's felicity, it seems to be the measure of its understanding, from which it never swerves.

When Man turns his eyes inwards, upon himself, he sees in himself the brute in great perfection, similar calls to preserve life, and to propagate the species, and similar gratifications for obeying those calls; but then he feels somewhat in himself more noble; somewhat
that

that distinguishes him from all the rest of the animal creation, that falls within his knowledge; he is conscious of reflection, he can complicate Ideas, and compare them together; he can discover the relations of things; he can perceive the beauty, the order, the harmony of the creation; he can, in the creatures, see the power, the wisdom, and the goodness of the Creator; he finds in himself an insatiable thirst after somewhat that has no connection with the body, after knowledge; a strong desire to contemplate, a disposition to admire, and to imitate perfection; a natural propensity to gratitude, and thankfulness for favours; and, when he carries his thoughts to the fountain of all wisdom, power, and goodness, the author of the creation, a fulness of heart that breaks out in gladness, and adoration.

WHEN Man considers that he alone, of all the animal creation, has got eyes to see the beauty, and excellency of the Universe; that he alone has got an understanding to discover the perfection of the Creator in his works; that he alone has got a soul fitted to admire, to adore, and to rejoice in the goodness, and perfection of his Maker, talents unnecessary for preserving his life, or propagating the species, but talents that qualify him for enjoying a much more permanent, and exalted kind of felicity than the other animals seem capable of relishing: Can he doubt that those eyes, this understanding, and that disposition of mind, was given him to fit him for seeing, admiring, and adoring the fountain of all goodness and being? Can he question that the doing so is indispensably his duty, as it would be his felicity? and can he imagine he answers the end of his creation, if, neglecting this care of those talents, he give himself wholly up to pursue those pleasures that are common to him with the brutes.

THE brutal appetites, and enjoyments, are nicely proportion'd to their ends, the preservation, and propagation of the animal; the appetites call regularly for what is necessary, and are fierce, in proportion as the want is great; when the want is supplied, the desire ceases; excess satiates, palls the appetite, and disorders the Machine.

IT is not so with the mental pursuits, and pleasures; the mind is absolutely insatiable; the more it knows, the keener it thirsts after knowledge; its desires are endless, and the object infinite.

BESIDES the power of thinking, Man has the faculty of communicating by speech, and recording his thoughts. The observation of each individual, and within the compass of a short life, could not go very far in science; but we are so made, that each may be helped by the discoveries of each other ; the desire of communicating knowledge is almost as strong as the desire to know ; and, as the end of the capacity to know is manifestly to discover the excellency of the Creator in his works, that the man may be filled with admiration, and acknowledgment, it is impossible to doubt that the end of the faculty of speech is to express, and communicate to each other, what we severally discover, to enlarge our ideas of the divine perfections, and to join in expressions of acknowledgment, and praise.

IT is not so with the Brute ; that is made to shew, and not to know, the excellency of the Creator.

ONE difference there is, highly remarkable, between the meer animal, and the rational creature ; Nature produces, spontaneous, all that is necessary for the brute ; whereas some art, besides industry, is necessary to make what Nature furnishes useful, and comfortable to man. The brute is clothed by Nature ; the earth uncultivated produces the herb ; the seed the berry that is fit for its nutriment ; raw meat suits the stomach of the carnivorous, nor is there any occasion for cookery, or dress : but it is otherwise with Man ; tho' Nature furnish abundantly the materials, yet skill, and industry is necessary to fit them for his use. By much the greatest part of the Globe would be uninhabited, if industry did not furnish clothing ; grains must be raised ; the juice of grapes and fruits must be fermented, and meat must be prepared for the stomach, before Man can make use of it.

BECAUSE Nature furnishes abundantly for all the occasions of the brute, they are each independent of the other, without connection, or society, except in a few instances where instinct calls them to it ; because it is in those instances necessary for the preservation, or propagation of the species.

BUT because men have occasion for the labour, the skill, the talents of each other, they are naturally social, and dependant on each other ; they are fitted to promote the interests of each other. The soul is so made, as to reap satisfaction from acts of beneficence, to feel concern from the sufferings of its fellow-creatures, and to be knit in bonds of friendship, and alliance with such as entertain the same sentiments.

THUS nature has made men fit for society, as it has made society necessary for them ; but the end of making society necessary for men, leads to a further consideration. No one can think that the infinitely wise, and powerful, could not have so framed men, that nature, alone and unaided, should have supplied all their wants ; but, if he had done so, solitude must have been the Inclination of the rational creature, and no more of the perfection of the Creator would have been known, or celebrated, than what fell within the observation of each individual. But as essential wisdom has disposed man, necessarily, for society, has provided them with proper faculties to communicate to each other their observations, and their sentiments, and has furnished them with inclinations to make such communications, and to join in acts of acknowledgment, and praise; it cannot be doubted that the chief, the high, and honourable end of fitting men for society, was to advance, and propagate the knowledge of Nature, and of the Author of it, and to promote and perfect that exercise of the soul, for which it was given to man.

WHEN Man surveys his own species, framed for the contemplation of the works of God, fitted for admiring, and adoring the author, and supporter; so contrived as to aid each other in that great design, and to contribute to one another's happiness, not only in that, but in the common enjoyments of the animal life; he cannot help considering each individual as the immediate servant of the Creator; he cannot dispense with observing the close relation, and connection, between the whole, and the necessary dependance each has on the other.

AND, when he recollects what pleasure results to the soul from consciousness of beneficent and merciful acts, what horror arises from the thoughts of cruelty, and injustice; he must needs see his duty towards his fellow-servants, and with thankfulness acknowledge the goodness of the Creator, who has annexed immediate pleasure to each act of duty, and joined horror to transgression.

VIEW then Man in his perfect state, as from the ruins still remaining, we certainly know he must have been Blessed with all the enjoyments that give relish to the animal life; Distinguished, from the rest of the visible creation, by that intelligent principle that enables him to see the infinite wisdom, power, and goodness of the author of nature in his works; Chosen to be a witness to the boundless perfections of the Eternal; Possessed of an insatiable desire of knowledge, and fresh discoveries pouring in upon him, without ceasing; Qualified to admire, to praise, and to adore, and perpetual occasions offering themselves for those rapturous exercises; Placed in society, with companions fitted for the like enjoyments, and so made as to promote his felicity, under ties of duty to them, but duty the performance whereof was necessarily to be rewarded with pleasure; Conscious of the favour of his infinitely powerful, and beneficent Creator,

Creator, and therefore blessed in the exercise of perpetual thankfulness: View man, I say, in this light, and say whether imagination can suggest to it self a state of higher felicity, or conceive how man came by choice, and of his own free will, to relinquish it?

SUCH was man! but view him in his present condition, and you see a creature still possessed of all those qualities that fitted him for seeing and enjoying the chief good, with supreme delight; but you see those talents monstrously and mischievously employed; those eyes, and that understanding, that were given to perceive with transport the perfections of the creator in his works, are now no more employed in that glorious service; the heart, and the desire, that panted after, and rejoiced in the favour and protection of the fountain of goodness, have ceased to act upon that object; all the mental powers, all the springs of the heart, are still at work in search of felicity; but they seek for it where no real good is to be found, and contribute to the real misery of unfortunate man. The sovereign good neglected, all those talents, that were given for discovering and enjoying it, are turned to the improvement of those pleasures that man has in common with the brutes. The skill and industry of that intelligent creature, are occupied in pursuing the gratifications of the brutal appetites; and, in so doing, weaken and disable even those appetites from answering their real uses; or are employed in finding, and laying up means for such beastly gratifications. In the place of social affection, and benevolence to mankind, malice, envy, fraud, rapine, murder prevail; in the place of God, love chuses Self for its object. Knowledge, if looked after, is sought to gratify a vain, an useless curiosity, but not to lead to the source of knowledge, and life; in short, rebel to God, man sets up the vilest of his creatures in his room, and employs those faculties that were given for the service and enjoyment of the Eternal, in pursuits infinitely dishonourable, and offensive.

IN this distressed, this frightful condition, human nature can hardly bear looking in upon it self: the crime, as well as the folly, is so monstrous, that serious reflection on it must sour all the silly enjoyments that men amuse themselves with, and create apprehensions which, without some foundation for hopes, would be absolutely intolerable; and therefore mankind, to avoid reflections so very disagreeable, suffer the active principle, intended to lead to God, to carry them away from one brutish pursuit to another: if any beam of light, darting in upon their soul, should shew them their duty, they shut it out, because it points out the forfeit; and, because the amazing long-suffering, and patience of the Deity, delays deserved punishment, unhappy mortals are ready to harden themselves into a belief, that there is no God to be offended at their treason, or to flatter themselves with hopes, that, as they live like brutes, they shall die like brutes, and by ceasing to be, escape vengeance.

SUCH is the depraved state of wretched mankind! and such the perverse turn of those whose minds are so debauched with brutal pleasures, as to like the beastly state in which they are. But they, in whom the Image of God is not altogether defaced, who entertain honourable notions of the supreme Goodness, who see with wonder the long-suffering and forbearance of the infinitely Just, and who cannot conceive, that Essential Justice could dispense with vengeance for a moment, if some consideration of infinite value did not interpose, are willing to entertain hopes that some ransom may have been found for the offence of mankind, some expedient provided, by the wisdom and goodness of God, for obliterating their crimes, and restoring them to the favour and protection of the Eternal; and to have those hopes confirmed, and improved into a well-grounded and certain belief, is the chief object of their wishes, as it would be the only solid foundation of their happiness.

WHOEVER has the faintest glimpse of such hopes, if he acts rationally, will not cease enquiring, with the utmost earnestness and accuracy, till he discover whether there is any just foundation for them, or no; he will consult nature, he will examine authorities, and will be equally solicitous not to admit insufficient, as he will be not to reject sufficient evidence.

IN such an enquiry, beginning with the natural light still remaining unextinguished, and carefully separating what does, from what does not flow from it; examining the notions commonly received about the Deity, and comparing them with the dictates of reason, many propositions will appear demonstratively true: for example;

1. THAT the Deity is infinitely powerful; good, and intelligent, is deducible from nature.
2. THAT the Deity is merciful, so as to pardon sin, and to be reconcilable to sinners, is not deducible from nature.
3. THAT the Deity is possessed of qualities like to those in the soul of man, such as love, anger, compassion, is not deducible from nature.

4. THAT there is a plurality of Persons in the Deity, is not deducible from nature.

5. THAT man's sin, upon atonement, is to be pardoned, and he reconciled to the Deity, is not deducible from nature.

6. THAT the sufferings of a man, to whom one of the Persons of the Deity was to be joined, was to be that atonement, is not deducible from nature.

7. THAT the effect of this atonement and reconciliation, was to give all mankind a right to approach, and rely on the protection and beneficence of a placated Deity, is not deducible from nature.

8. THAT the Deity, thus appeased, is delighted in prayers and praises, is not deducible from nature.

9. THAT there is a correspondence between the souls of men and the Deity, is not deducible from nature.

10. THAT the prayers of men are acceptable to the Deity, heard, and answered, through the intercession of that Person whose sufferings atoned for sin, is not deducible from nature.

IF then these things concerning the Deity, and man's state, are true, and of absolute necessity to be known to man, for his comfort, and towards enabling him to perform any acceptable duty to his Creator, his knowledge must come by revelation, and that knowledge must be kept up by institutions, or records.

1. THAT there is such a thing as right and wrong, may, and must be known, without revelation.

2. THAT right must be attended with reward, and wrong with punishment, is known without revelation.

3. THAT therefore there must be a future state, for rewards and punishments, must be known without revelation.

4. THAT man is in a depraved state, at enmity with the Deity, is known without revelation; and must have been known so soon as that state of enmity began.

IN this depraved state, man, attentive to his own circumstances, must have been in a condition infinitely wretched, the object of the just indignation of the Almighty, here and hereafter; helpless, and hopeless, because no defence against offended justice; and must have continued incapable of hope, or comfort, or of attempting any means

means of placating, or of obtaining the protection of the Deity, unless the mercy of God, and his acceptance of the atonement provided, had been revealed to him, with evidence of the authority of that revelation, so convincing as to gain absolute belief; this, and nothing less, could render life tolerable.

1. WE know certainly that all men are, and from the earliest ages have been, in a state of enmity and corruption.

2. THAT men now have, and from the earliest times have had, comfort from a persuasion of mercy and forgiveness from God, contrary to reason, and the strongest evidence which from thence can result.

3. THAT the whole world, from the earliest times, used nearly the same rites, ceremonies, and institutions religious, for placating the Deity, averting wrath, procuring favour, returning thanks, by Sacrifices, Burnt-offerings, Blood; means that, in nature, have no sort of connection with the end proposed, and therefore could not possibly have had their origin from reason, or natural light.

AND, as this belief, and these religious observances, prevailed over all mankind, without any support from, but rather contrary to reason, it is a just conclusion, that the authority for such a belief, and such observances, must have been exceeding high and strong; and man cannot think of any sufficient authority to have produced that universal faith, short of divine revelation.

THE doctrine of remission of sins, and expiation by blood, is, till the secret is explained by revelation, so destitute of any foundation in reason, and apparently so contrary to it, that no Reasoner could ever have thought of it; and, if he had, no one could have given credit to it, without some convincing proof for the authority of that doctrine, which, as has been said, could not possibly have been from reason. The universal reception then of that doctrine, is a demonstration, in its own kind, that it had a divine authority.

IF the Deity had determined to pardon man, by and through an Intercessor, and upon satisfaction, that would not have answered the end; without man were acquainted with, and believed it, he would remain in the same gloomy state of despair, without the least glimpse of hopes, or encouragement to pray, to praise, to love, or to rejoice in the mercy and salvation of God; which would have left him a prey to his terrors and his lusts, and must have determined him to have shut out all thoughts of the Deity. For nothing could possibly determine man to hope, to pray, to praise, to serve, to rejoice in the protection of the Deity, but a firm conviction and belief that God was placated, would forgive, and protect, and was pleased with services.

IF then it was the intention of God to pardon man, to restore him to a capacity of serving him, to reclaim him from his sinful state, to encourage him to love, fear, and serve his Creator; it was absolutely necessary, towards that design, to acquaint man with his intentions, to give such proof of those intentions, as should convince, and thoroughly persuade those to whom the revelation was made, and to preserve such evidence of that revelation to mankind, as should be sufficient to support their faith and hope.

THE lowest degree of faith that can possibly be sufficient to quiet the soul of man, and to restore him to a capacity of serving comfortably his God, and trusting to his favour and protection, is a firm conviction that God is placable, and will pardon upon repentance, and protect.

WHATEVER degree of evidence or revelation fixed this in man's mind, restored him quiet, and a possibility of endeavouring to gain the favour of God; and, supposing the belief absolute, must determine the man so believing, to seek and serve God, to the best of his ability and understanding.

THEY to whom the merciful intentions of God have been the most fully revealed, and to whom the evidence of that revelation has the most distinctly appeared, are in a much happier condition, and have many more incentives and helps to piety and devotion, than those who have just light enough to know that God is merciful, and to believe that he will pardon, upon repentance, and a hearty conversion of the desire of the soul towards him. But, if the belief of the latter is total and absolute, it may change his heart, and his course of life, and bring him within the favour and protection of his God. Hence faith, so much prized in the old and new Testament; not that faith, as such, is of value, but because where it truly is, it must produce a change of soul, and obedience. No man, who verily believes any fruit to be poison, will taste it; and let any man who knowingly sins, say what he will, he has not faith, when he so acts.

As this belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, and must have been intended to reach them all, the evidence for inducing it, must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. There must be that sort of evidence that leads the vulgar, the unthinking, the illiterate; and there must be also such proof as shall determine the ingenious, the inquisitive, the learned.
must

BY much the greatest part of mankind have no other evidence for this belief, than general received opinion; what has been held by their fathers, and all their acquaintance, passes for truth, and produces resolutions and actions.

IT is impossible to believe any thing more firmly, than the vulgar do that the Earth stands still, and that the Sun moves round; a belief as general, and as absolute, of the facts revealed for the comfort and salvation of mankind, would produce a conduct very different from what we see.

WHERE the common opinions about the devil, witches, witchcraft, &c. prevail, the belief is transmitted to posterity, and the children doubt as little as the fathers did.

IF these things were true, and capable of demonstration, the vulgar would believe, not because of the demonstration, which they have not leisure, or learning, or capacity to enter into, but because of the fixed opinions of others, from whom they learn.

FOR as they are not true, nay some of them demonstratively false, the vulgar believe them, because they are not qualified to examine the demonstration.

BUT if there is not such evidence as is fit to satisfy the learned and the inquisitive, it cannot produce belief in them; and the vulgar opinion cannot be of long continuance, where the learned and the inquisitive declare against it.

THE evidence therefore attending revelation ought to be such as was fit to create and continue a very firm and general belief, and opinion, amongst the gross of mankind; and to conquer, and answer the doubts and scruples of the inquisitive and the learned.

THAT the first publication of the merciful intentions of God to men, and the declaration of so much as he thought fit to reveal concerning himself, and what was to be done and believed, was attended with sufficient evidence to support the authority of the revelation, cannot be doubted, because the design was to gain belief.

AND if, in every succeeding age, the same publication had been made, with the like evidence, there is no doubt we should have no unbeliever.

BUT, in fact, we see it has not pleased God to repeat, in this manner, the evidence of his revelation.

NOR is the not repeating the evidence, to satisfy the curiosity of impertinent and presumptuous objectors, who measure the conduct of the Deity by their own vain imaginations, any just cause of doubting the original revelation, if the proofs of that revelation are sufficient to induce belief.

GOD could have prevented man's sinning originally; he could have restored him absolutely, to his pristine state; and he could have continued standing and perpetual obvious miracles, for confirming revelation; but he has done neither of these. And, though no other answer could be given to the question, why has he not? but that it has not suited his wise scheme, for the government of his Grace to man, it is beyond all doubt sufficient.

IF it was the scheme of the Deity;

To create man perfect, with a capacity of retaining that perfection, or of falling from it, which we call liberty, without interposing further, to determine him either to the one, or to the other;

To restore him to a capacity of regaining happiness, by publishing means of salvation, with divine or supernatural evidence, and appointing the most feasible means for continuing the belief of that revelation, without farther interposing, 'till the ill use of the free-will, or liberty of man, made farther interposition necessary; and

To display omnipotent power, or remarkable events, when the notable defection of mankind made it necessary, in order to confirm or restore the revelation, at that time, and to produce still stronger and stronger evidence for it, to succeeding generations; who dare presume to find fault with such œconomy?

WHO can tell what wise ends the Deity may have to answer by shewing, in the several stages of the world, and under the different degrees of light and information, what use the heart of man was to make of free-will, and of the mercy of God offered?

IF it was the intention of the Deity to reveal to man the method of Salvation; That a Saviour was to come in the flesh, by his death and suffering to atone for sin; and that the Saviour, having abolished sin by his sufferings, was to become intercessor for man, to reconcile him to the Deity, and produce communication between them; no doubt this might be, by convincing evidence, intimated and published at first: and the question is, what would be the most proper method for continuing to posterity the belief of the truth so revealed?

IT does not appear that, in the earliest times, writing by letters, or recording facts any other way, than by emblematical or hieroglyphical representations, was known or in use.

AND, if writing by letters had been in use, such writing, to prove it of divine authority to succeeding generations, would require evidence.

TRADITION surely was one way; but that, without other help, not very certain, and liable to infinite mistakes; as well as the authority of it, for that reason, liable to doubt.

BUT, if to Tradition was added certain constant, ritual, and emblematical observances, at fixed times, for ever to be continued and endure; then, in proportion as the emblems were expressive, and universally received, the memory and belief of the matter represented would remain distinct and strong, and the end of recording be obtained.

ANNIVERSARY, monthly, weekly days observed, preserve fresh the memory of most events.

IF therefore it was the command of God, that to keep in mind the revelation that a Saviour, the first-born of a woman, should die for the sins of men, should by his blood atone, and become Intercessor for mankind, Man should kill a kid, or a lamb, shed its blood, sprinkle the blood towards the same place which the Deity directed to be emblematical of the place of its residence, choosing a perfect, unspotted male, as the emblem of the suffering Saviour, and a perfect first-born amongst men, as the emblem of the first-born, the Intercessor; and, if this emblematical act was to be repeated once, or oftner, every year, on a stated day; once every moon, on the first day; once every week, on the seventh day; and twice every day, morning and evening; and if, on those occasions, men were in the emblems to see, with sorrow, the representation of the blood they forfeited, and, with joy, to entertain the hopes of mercy through that blood, which the blood of the beast sacrificed represented; and to believe that God, on those occasions, was willing to hear their prayers, and receive their praises: the invention of man cannot devise any other method, so likely to preserve and perpetuate, the knowledge and belief of a revelation, so necessary to mankind.

MEN, indeed, might err, after a course of generations, in the exposition and application of those emblems, and emblematical actions; and,

and, when the true sense and intention of them was varied, or in any degree lost, imagination would suggest other, and different, nay even false meanings; but, so long as the observance remained, a belief of placating the Deity by blood must remain: which belief is, of all others, the most unreasonable, except as it is explained, by the original, and only true sense and meaning, of the emblems and institutions.

THUS what was intended by the priest's intercessory office, was lost, though officiating by a priest remained; what was intended by the first-born's being to discharge the priestly office, was forgot, long before men ceased to look upon the right of priesthood to be in the first-born; what was intended by sacrificing a perfect MALE, was lost, whilst great accuracy was employed to take care that nothing but what was perfect should be sacrificed; nay, such was the weakness of mankind, that they forgot the blood shed was typical and emblematical only, and imagined a real virtue in it, than which nothing could be more absurd: but still they continued with the greatest zeal to make use of sacrifice, to believe it a mean of atoning for sins, of averting punishments, of procuring favours from the Deity; they thought Sacrifices made their prayers and praises acceptable, that there was something sacred in it, that it bound contracts and covenants of all kinds, and that the Deity expected and required sacrifice of them, and would be highly offended if that service was discontinued.

So that, notwithstanding all the errors, wandrings, and false imaginations of mankind, they still retained, by this EMBLEMATICAL INSTITUTION, a strong belief that the Deity was placable, and that sins were forgivable; which left it possible for them to hope, and to endeavour to gain the divine favour, and consequently to love and serve the Deity. And the perpetual and universal use of sacrifice, with particular rites, and under particular observances, after the original meaning and intention of them was lost, is a proof, not only of their divine origin, but also of the reality of that Sacrifice which those emblems were intended to represent.

THE original and primary use of sacrifice, and of all other religious institutions, was commemorative of the original revelation, a sort of daily MEMORIAL, or Record of what God declared, and man believed and hoped. But, as the declaration of God regarded a future event, every one, almost, of those institutions and emblematical matical ordinances must be looked upon also as prophetick, which, when the event predicted happened, proves a demonstration, much above what HUMANITY could invent, of the Divinity of the INSTITUTION, and of the certainty of the hopes and belief founded on that event.

BESIDES the original intention of being commemorative and predictive, there was a very useful design in the annual, monthly, weekly, and daily Services, to give men frequent occasions of searching into themselves, as in the presence of the Deity, of confessing, worshipping, and adoring; and so reforming, and preserving their minds from folly. This, in time, they mistook for the chief end, forgetting the chief end almost entirely; and at last, they greatly corrupted even the secondary design, imagining that there was merit in the sacrifice, as such; that the Deity loved sacrifice, and expected it, as a tribute that was due: tho' God never required Sacrifice (it is in this sense the Scripture says so) for his own sake, as one may say, but instituted it for the sake of men, as a memorial to keep in mind what he had revealed. To this end was the frequency, as well as to give frequent opportunities of worship, the true service of the heart, and reflection, which vain man almost entirely forgot.

As the antiquity, and universality of sacrifice, notwithstanding the various corruptions, with which, by the imaginations of men, it was infected, is a proof of its divine original; so is the ridiculous POLYTHEISM of antiquity, evidence, in some degree, of a plurality of PERSONS in the Deity; as the opinion, in all appearance, must have flowed from some revelation, or institution, for preserving the memory and knowledge of that revelation.

NOTHING is more remote from any foundation in reason than the doctrine of the TRINITY, and therefore it is a fair conclusion, that it must be owing to REVELATION, real or supposed.

As inconsistent as the TRINITY seems to be with reason, Polytheism is no less so; all nature speaks for ONE Deity, and even the doctrine of the TRINITY supposes it.

AND yet in almost all the antient nations we find Polytheism established; they had a plural to the noun GOD: nay, the eldest of all languages, the Hebrew, uses almost always the plural noun ELOHIM, when speaking of the Deity, frequently joined with plural verbs; tho' the Scripture, the only book extant in that language, takes care to let us know that this plural ELOHIM is but ONE Deity.

Now,

Now, as the knowledge of the TRINITY, if true, must be had by REVELATION, and not by REASON, if the Deity was pleased to disclose so much of ITS OWN nature to mankind, IT must do it by referring to ideas taken from natural things; and, if the knowledge of that discovery was to be recorded, whilst hieroglyphical or emblematical was the only WRITING, there must be a conjunction of three Emblems in one, to represent what was intended: Such conjunctions, by Egyptian and other monuments yet extant, appear to have been very frequent in earlier times, and very probably owed their origin to the lawful emblems first proposed by the Deity; and the word in the Hebrew used to signify the IMAGE or Representation of the Deity, carried about as an IDOL, is plural also, [TERAPHIM] tho' relating only to one image or idol.

THE imagination of man, however, as in the case of sacrifice, dropping the only rational thing, the UNITY, made use of the plurality of Persons in the one Deity, to coin a plurality of Deities; and, by retaining that notion against all reason, gives ground to conclude that it must have flowed from some very high, tho' mistaken original; and to enquire what the fountain of so extraordinary an opinion may have been.

As the imagination of man, proceeding from one mistake to another, must, at last, have obliterated the knowledge of all REVELATION, notwithstanding the wisest precaution to preserve it; it behoved the Deity, persisting steadfast in the purpose of mercy to mankind, to renew that REVELATION from time to time, and to rectify abuses with such authority, for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed; and, if that merciful and perfect Being was to shut up all REVELATION, and to cease from farther interposition by extraordinary appearances amongst men, it behoved him to make the REVELATION so complete, and to leave it so fixed and unalterable, and attended with such Evidence for the truth of it, as should leave no further room for error or doubt, amongst those who, with respectful hearts to the Deity, sought after the truth.

THO' it is extremely obvious, that such a REVELATION and RECTIFICATION must have been, yet seek for it amongst all the monuments, the wisdom, the records of the heathen world, and you shall seek in vain; nothing but vanity and madness. The wisest of them, at least of those that have come to our hands, seem to have known little of MAN'S fallen, desperate state, and appear to have (when they turn'd their thoughts to Religion) known nothing further than a parcel of the lyes and forgeries of their Priests.

So that, if any of the ancient Heathens wrote before their REVELATION was totally corrupted, it is lost, having been neglected by their successors, who did not understand what it meant.

BUT in looking over Mankind, as they are at this day, we find a NATION in very particular circumstances, Distinguished from all the People that are, or perhaps ever were upon the face of the earth; the CHILDREN, as they believe, of one Man; Professing a Religion different from that of all the Nations that now are scattered up and down the whole earth; Without dominion, power, or property any where; Tenacious, to death, of their own Religion, and Opinions; for that reason despised, hated, oppressed, and persecuted; and yet, subsisting in so prodigious numbers, that, were they to be brought together, they would prove a mighty People, EXAMINING the history of this People (I mean the Jews) we find they were very Powerful about 2000 years ago; Possessed of a country, their own, and called by their own Name; in the full Exercise of a Religion with Ceremonies, and Services peculiar to themselves; in a firm Belief derived from their holy Books, which they held to be REVELATION, that some very extraordinary Person, of their blood and kindred, should then arise, who should deliver them from all their Enemies, and set up a Kingdom above all the Kingdoms of the earth.

WE find some time after, that, encouraged by this opinion, they quarrelled with the Romans; and, after the most obstinate defence that ever People made, were utterly overthrown, their City and Temple destroyed, and those that escaped the sword scattered up and down over the face of the earth,

WE find that the particularity of their Faith and Service, the distinction that subsisted between them and other Nations, and the seditiousness and mutiny of their Department, founded on the persuasion of a great DELIVERER to come, brought total dissipation upon them, so that they became every where the object of severe laws and ill usage.

AND we find, nevertheless, that for near 1700 years they have remained, under all these distresses and difficulties, a People distinct from those they live amongst, tenacious of their own Religion and Observances, not to be bribed or frightned from them, and fully convinced their Religion is immediately from God, and that the great DELIVERER, for them, is still to come.

A Circumstance so very singular calls for extraordinary attention. Of the many Nations and Kindreds famous for Prowrefs, for Laws, for religious Opinions, is there any that remained, that preserved their Name after a Conquest? Did not all mix and blend themselves with the Conqueror? Of all the Religions, that ever have been, did any stick so close to the profession of it, that, for a series of Ages, they did not forsake it for the Religion of the Country they became subjects of; that infamy and oppression could not drive them from it, but rather rivetted them the stronger in it?

AND this is still the more amazing, That the Religion they hold is of all others the most absurd, as they understand it; and that the hopes they entertain are, undoubtedly, chimerical and false.

ENQUIRE of this People, and you shall find their Faith is founded on a Book, which contains their LAW, said to have come immediately from God, the HISTORY of this Nation, and certain HYMNS, and PROPHECYES, all which they firmly believe to have been written by Divine Inspiration, and to contain the WILL, and WORD of God.

THIS Book they entertain with the highest esteem, and preserve with such scrupulous exactness, that there are in the Copies of it fewer various readings than in any other book extant, that they have never suffered a various reading, how true soever, to enter into the text; and that, as fond as they are of their method of Pointing, for varying the sound, and thereby the sense in some degree, of the Hebrew words, they have never dared to add those Points to the Copies of their LAW read in their Synagogues, believing that such an addition would be a prophanation.

THAT this Book is not fictitious, nor in any part forged to gratify the vanity of the Jews, but, when first given to them, came with authority sufficient to enforce the reception of it, will appear to those who look into it, from this observation; That, throughout, the Jews are described as the vilest, the wickedest of all men; They are severely reprov'd for their faults, DESTRUCTION is threatned, nay it is formally, and over and over again, predicted that they shall be confounded, that they shall be Dark, and Blind, that the Book which they keep shall be sealed up from them, that they shall not understand, understand, and therefore shall be rejected; and the Nations, at large, taken to be the People of God, in their room.

RECEIVING the Book originally, with such a sting in it, shews the Authority was high; and preserving it entire, without striking out or altering such passages, proves the Book was held sacred. Not to mention, here, the argument arising for the authority of the Book, from the exact completion of the Predictions.

THE first cursory view of this Book must fill any man, who has looked into all the Remains of the antient Learning, Philosophy, and Religion of the Nations with a strong prepossession in its favour: Amongst all these nothing but folly, and impertinence, is to be met with; no tolerable Idea of the Deity; none of the Duty of Man, from the true motive; none at all of the chief and peculiar Felicity of the human race, in the enjoyment of the favour of God.

BUT in this Book, from one end to the other, the Praises of God, described as One Spiritual, Infinite, Eternal, Merciful, Gracious, Long-suffering, Just, Powerful, in short infinitely Perfect, are every where to be met with. The Duty of Man is placed where it ought to be; and the Felicity of Man is described to consist in the enjoyment of the favour of the Deity, to be obtained by conforming to the Will of God, and yielding him the heart; this is the language, the spirit of the whole; nothing contradictory to this, whatever vain men may fancy, to the contrary, from some ill understood passages.

THIS Reflection will not be so prevailing with the unlearned, who, in the most common books since the Christian Era, meet with the most just, and at the same time the most noble, and sublime Ideas, which are all, tho' they do not know so much, taken from the Jews sacred Book: But it will be very cogent with those that have read all the Remains of the Heathen World, prior to Christianity, and who alone can make the comparison, and see the peculiarity of the character of this Book, as it differs from all others, the productions of Men.

THIS Book, taken all together, seems intended to promote Religious respect and service to the Deity; and to raise strong hopes, and confidence of mercy and felicity.

IT contains a compleat system of SACRIFICATURE, with all the rites and religious observances thereto belonging, said to be delivered to the Children of Israel by the Deity, in the most solemn manner, by the hands of Moses.

THIS System which is called the LAW, or the DIRECTORY, is said to have been published by the Deity, in a manner attended with great signs and wonders, in the presence of all the people, as to some part of it; and, as to the rest, by Moses, to whose authority God, by very surprizing miracles, gave credit.

THIS LAW is said to have been reduced into Writing by Moses, at the command of God, to be for ever preserved, and observed, with promises of perpetual felicity, in case of observing, and threats of BLINDNESS, and DESTRUCTION, to the whole Nation, in case of not observing it.

THIS LAW was given to the Children of Israel, the Issue of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to each of whom it was promised that out of their Seed should arise That which should bless the whole earth. This people is said to have been, by the immediate providence of God, kept distinct from all other Nations, till the LAW was directly given to them; and, then, by the very tenor and tendency of that LAW, was to remain distinct from all other people, so long as their Nation subsisted.

BY the scheme of this INSTITUTION it appears, That the people were to be under the immediate government of the Deity; to possess a fruitful land, in the middle of the then best peopled part of the earth; that God was to be in a particular manner present with them, to be consulted with, in a sacred place (first in the Tabernacle, and then in the Temple) by sacred Rites, and to give decisions, and directions; And that, from time to time, he was to raise up Prophets to admonish, rebuke, and direct.

BESIDES the Writings ascribed to Moses, called the LAW, the Book contains the HISTORY of the Nation from Moses's time to their first Captivity, for their defection from God, predicted first in the Law, and afterwards by succeeding Prophets.

IT contains the writings and predictions of several Prophets, and the PSALMS, or religious HYMNS of the Nation, employed in the divine Service, and composed by inspired men for the use of the people.

IN these HYMNS, and other writings, a system of the faith and hope of the enlightned Jews is to be met with; the true meaning and use of EMBLEMS, SYMBOLS, and TYPES is explained; errors in practice, and opinion are reproved; the expectation of mercy and salvation by a Divine Person is raised; That Person is, under various representations, described; The Change of the, then, present INSTI-

TUTION

TUTION for a better is intimated; The BLINDNESS, and total defection, and destruction of the Jews, with their State and Temple, is predicted; The CALLING into their room the Gentiles is foretold;
And the time, for that great event, limited and described with characters, and marks, that cannot be mistaken.

IF the Book, then, that contains all these things be Divine, it is plain that God did not leave Man without farther assistance to aid and induce his faith, after promulgation of Peace, but that he renewed the glad TYDINGS; as, from the nature of the thing, ought to have been done.

AND, if it shall appear to be true, that the manner in which he renewed that Revelation has furnished a demonstrative, permanent evidence, which never needs to be renewed, of his grace and favour to lost Man, it calls for belief, and the highest acknowledgment of his mercy, and wisdom.

IF the history of Moses his miracles, his communication with the Deity, is true, there is no possibility to call in question the truth of what he delivers.

AS the LAW, and INSTITUTION founded by Moses was to establish Religion, and to make Mercy and Peace known to the whole Earth, the Writings ascribed to him begin with the CREATION, and carry down a general account of the concerns of mankind, till the Election of Abraham and his Seed.

THE thing Moses begins with is the CREATION of the HEAVENS and the EARTH by the Deity, which, tho' true to the Conviction of all mankind, no antient Wise-man ever found out. Here is no ridiculous Theogonia, no eternal Chaos, no fortuitous concurrence of Atoms, but a fair and a true declaration, In the beginning God created the Heavens and the Earth.

HE further takes notice of the Institution of the Sabbath, which, tho' the Antients observed, they knew not the reason, or occasion of.

THE declaration of this undiscovered truth gives strong prepossession in favour of the rest.

THE next important thing is that Man fell from a state of Innocence. This, as has been said, every living man must find to be true, upon examination; and yet none of the Wise, whose works have come to us, ever thought of it; nothing more certain, nothing more important to be attended to; nothing less known; but this Moses

Moses distinctly relates as the cause, or at least the occasion, of every thing that followed.

THE third thing he marks is the confusion, and desperate state, in which mankind was, upon the FALL; ashamed of his fault, without hope in the mercy of God, and therefore studious to hide himself from him. This, the FALL being true, must necessarily be true too; and therefore we readily believe Moses.

THE fourth thing he relates is, that God revealed his purpose of mercy to Mankind, and thereby deliver'd them from dread, despair, and confusion. The words, in which Moses relates the promise of mercy are, that the Seed of the Woman should bruise the head of the Serpent, and the Seed of the Serpent should bruise his heel.

THESE words, which are all that is said, do not, it is true, say that this Seed of the Woman should be sacrificed; tho' bruising the heel looks mighty like the suffering of the lower, and least noble, part of that Seed; nor do they say that sacrifice, and the other observances of the LAW were then instituted; but it appears plainly that, soon after, Cain and Abel offered, and that at a stated or appointed time; it appears Noah sacrificed, and that, in his days, Man was commanded to abstain from eating BLOOD, as a thing sacred; it appears the Patriarchs did so, without any precedent, institution, or commandment, recorded, and that their Sacrifices were respected by the Deity; and it appears that all the nations of the Earth, who sprung from the first PARENTS, practised Sacrifice, with nearly the same rites: Wherefore, it may fairly be concluded that sacrifice, and the rites thereto belonging, were instituted upon the first promulgation of the EVANGELIUM, the tydings of mercy, and from that Institution were transmitted to all mankind: and it would imply an absurdity to suppose, that this EMBLEMATICAL, COMMEMORATIVE, observance was instituted without man's knowing the reason, and meaning of it.

WE know by History, without the help of Moses, that all Mankind sacrificed in hopes of mercy; from reason we discover that those hopes must have been founded on REVELATION, and that Sacrifice (which of itself could signify nothing) must have been no more than a memorial, by Institution. And now from Moses we learn that those hopes were actually founded on explicate revelation by the God of Nature; and that Sacrifice, which the same God says in itself signifies nothing, was practiced, just after, by the favourites of the Deity, Deity, and acceptable to him, and that he gave a new model of that Institution, correcting abuses in the wilderness.

WE learn, next, from Moses that God was pleased at different times to appear to, and converse, with Men, Adam, Enoch, Noah; and that, nevertheless, men corrupted themselves so monstrously an early instance whereof is Cain's killing his brother Abel, that the Deity brought on a FLOOD, which destroyed the whole earth, and with it all men, except Noah and his family.

THIS FLOOD all antient Nations have confused tradition about, and tho' Exuvie still remaining near the surface of the Earth give very strong evidence of it, yet there is no sensible account of it from the Ancients, which strongly raises the credit and authority of Moses's Writings.

BY the direction to take into the ARK a greater number of clean than of unclean beasts, and by Noah's practice, immediately after the FLOOD, of sacrificing of every clean beast and bird, it is evident the distinction, of clean and unclean, does not depend originally on the LAW of Moses, but has its origin before the FLOOD, probably at the first publication of Grace to Adam.

AS the FLOOD destroyed all the corrupted, and to Noah and his family was demonstration of the power of, and obedience due to the Deity, this great event was a total extirpation of all false Religion; and, humanly speaking, it was to be hoped the faith, and religious service; of men would have continued long pure.

BUT that was not the case; for, as Adam's son Cain sinned early, so did Noah's Son Ham; he merited to be pronounced accursed of his father, soon after the deliverance from the FLOOD; and, before the memory of that dreadful judgment was lost, men meditated the setting up a false Religion, and Service, to the Heavens at Babel, which the Deity disappointed, by confounding and dividing their IMAGINATIONS, so that they separated and dispersed at that time.

AS Moses relates the destruction of the Antediluvian world, by the FLOOD, so he gives an account of re-peopling the earth by the three sons of Noah, giving a brief abstract of the Descent of the families from these three sons; and it is extremely remarkable, and strongly confirms the truth of Moses's history, that, from the most accurate and judicious inquiry into the prophane records and monuments extant, it does appear the world has been re-peopled in the the manner which Moses describes, and nearly about the same time, counting backwards from known periods, by the justest rules.

AFTER the account given of the irreligious attempt at Babel, of the descent of mankind from Noah's Sons, and of the peopling of the earth, Moses begins the history of the Jewish Nation, descended from Abraham, who was sprung of Sem. This history, as to certain events, is very particular: It describes Abraham as called, immediately by God, away from a family and land that had begun to corrupt itself, to enter into a formal covenant with God: It describes the promise of the land of Canaan to Abraham, and to his seed, which is expressed in very extraordinary terms: It describes the same promises repeated to Isaac, and to Jacob: It relates the institution of CIRCUMCISION, which, if instituted before, seems to have been left off, to be observed by the whole race of Abraham: It relates the manner of the Children of Israel's going into Egypt, their bitter servitude there, and their separation from the Egyptians: It records their miraculous deliverance by the hand of Moses: It relates their long sojourning in the wilderness, and their progress toward the land promised: It relates the miraculous and surprising manner of the promulgation of the LAW by the Deity, with extraordinary signs and wonders: It records all the Rites and Ceremonies of the Sacrificature, and of the whole religious service of the Jewish Church: It records the Constitution of the Jewish civil government, which, as well as the religious, had God for its head: It describes the Tabernacle, the residence of the supreme Governor, till the Temple should be built: It records the promise of the Advent of another Prophet, like unto Moses, who was to be heard: It relates a formal cutting off the Type of the predicted PURIFYER, or the renewal thereof, and the Terms upon which the People should partake of the benefit of that PURIFICATION, commonly translated a COVENANT between God and the People; wherein strict obedience is promised on the part of the people, and, on that condition, great and perpetual blessings promised on the part of God; but a manifest prediction is, at the same time, made of the people's defection, and of their future destruction.

AND the end of all this surprising disposition, and œconomy, manifestly is to record, with great accuracy, the LAW with its several RITES and CEREMONIES, and to recommend the exact observance of it, to the end it never should be lost, or fall out of the view and knowledge of Mankind; but the particulars of it, and the authority
by

By which it was promulgated, should remain attested, to future generations, by better and stronger evidence than any other matter of fact ever was amongst men.

AND, if the giving this LAW, and the selecting and constituting this people to be the depositaries of it, in this manner, was the immediate act of God, it must certainly be of infinite consequence to have had that LAW so recorded, and preserved; and yet if you look only at the obvious and outside appearance of that LAW, it was of little or no use, and the observance of it has ceased many hundred years ago, and is now, without a miracle, become impracticable; whereas, viewing it in the light already hinted, it becomes the evidence of all hope and faith.

THE evidence the Jews had to believe the several matters related by Moses, preceding the deliverance from Egypt, was, so far as we know, no more than Moses's word, whose credit was sufficiently established by the testimonies given to him by the Deity; but, at the same time, it is not certain that they had not some distinct tradition concerning these things.

BUT, as to his authority, and the authority of the Laws and Institutions given by him, they had; and their children and we, who take it from their children, have the strongest evidence the nature of the thing is capable of: For,

1st, THE whole People, an infinite multitude, were witnesses of all the miracles wrought preceding the deliverance from Egypt, and of the final miracle that achieved their deliverance, in memory whereof, the PASSOVER, an annual solemnity, was instituted, with the strongest injunctions to acquaint their children with the cause of that observance, and to mark that night throughout all their generations for ever.

2<sup>dly</sup>, THE whole People were witnesses to the miracle in passing the Red-Sea, and sung that hymn which Moses composed on that occasion, which was preserved for the use of their children.

3<sup>dly</sup>, THE whole People were witnesses to the dreadful promulgation of the LAW from Sinai, with which they were also to acquaint their children, and the feast of PENTECOST was annually to be observed on the day on which that Law was given; besides that, the very Tables in which the ten COMMANDS were written, were deposited in the Ark, and remained, at least, till the building of Solomon's Temple, and probably till the destruction of it.

4thly, THE whole People were witnesses to the many miracles wrought, during the space of forty years, in the wilderness; to the Pillar of FIRE and CLOUD, to the MANNA, QUAILS, &c. a sample of the MANNA remained to future generations; and they were directed to relate what they saw to their children.

5thly, THE whole People were witnesses to the framing and building of the Ark, and Tabernacle, they were all contributors to it, they saw the CLOUD fill, and rest upon, it, and they assisted at the Services performed there; and, to commemorate this, as well as their sojourning in tents in the Wilderness, the annual Feast of TABERNACLES was appointed, which, in succeeding years, they were to explain to their Children.

As these things were absolutely sufficient to satisfy the children of Israel, then in being, touching the authority and obligation of this LAW, several things were added to enforce the observance, and to preserve the memory and evidence of what was to be observed.

1st, THE LAW was by Moses, at the command of God, put into Writing, for the greater certainty, as well as all the directions for making the ARK, the CHERUBIM, the TABERNACLE, the Priests GARMENTS, &c. and all the Rules of GOVERNMENT, JUDICATURE, &c. with every other circumstance revealed, for directing the faith and the conduct of the Nation.

2dly, THIS LAW was to be preserved, perused, and attended to, in the most careful manner; The Priests, who were to judge in questions relating to it, must be well versed in it; The King, who was to rule over the Nation, was to write out a Copy of it for himself, and to peruse it continually; And the People were to write out passages of it, and to wear them, by way of Signs, upon their Hands, and of Frontlets between their Eyes, and to write them upon the posts of their doors, &c. And they were to teach their children the most notable parts of it, and particularly to instruct them in the miracles attending the deliverance from Egypt, as they sat in their house, as they walked by the way, as they lay down, and as they rose up, &c.

3dly, BESIDES the authority that promulgated the LAW, there was a solemn COVENANT and Agreement between God and the people, whereby the people became bound to keep, preserve, and observe this LAW, and all that was contained in it; and God became bound to be the God of the Israelitish People, to protect, and prosper them: and this COVENANT, towards the end of their sojourning in the wilderness, was solemnly renewed.

5thly, THE particulars on the part of the People, were to serve Jehovah, and no other God, in the way directed by the LAW, to preserve, observe, and obey, the LAW carefully and exactly, and if they failed or transgressed, to submit and consent to the severe sanction of the LAW and COVENANT, which, in many instances was, to individuals transgressing, death (to be cut off from the people) and to the bulk of the People DESTRUCTION, CAPTIVITY, DISPERSION, BLINDNESS, MADNESS, &c. besides the forfeiture of all the good promises.

6thly, BESIDES the other blessings, and preeminences, God was, by some special visible Symbol of his presence, to reside continually with the people, first, in the Tabernacle which was made in the wilderness for that end, and, afterwards, in the Temple, whence he was to give judgment and directions, and to answer prayers, and accept of vows.

7thly, THIS COVENANT was also reduced into writing, and was the tenure by which the Israelites held the land of Canaan, and on which all their hopes were founded; Wherefore, it must in all generations be considered by them as a thing of no small moment.

As God was the head of this STATE, and as the people held immediately their land of him, so he made several Regulations for holding that property, that are very remarkable.

1st, THE Land was by his command divided into twelve lots, one for each Tribe, and they were put in possession accordingly, to the exclusion of the tribe of Levi, who for their portion had no more than what attended the service of God's house, and some Cities, with Suburbs, dispersed amongst other Tribes.

2<sup>dly</sup>, NOT only were the descendants of each Tribe to enjoy, in exclusion of other Tribes, their own lot, but the particular fields and parcels, within each Tribe, were to remain for ever with the respective families that first possessed them, and, on failure of the Issue of the Possessor, to the nearest of that family: Hence, all lands sold returned at the Jubilee to the Proprietor, or his nearest a-kin; he who had right to avenge blood, might Redeem.

3<sup>dly</sup>, THIS right of Blood, depending upon knowledge of descent and genealogy, made it absolutely necessary for the children of Israel to keep very exact records and proofs of their descent, not to mention the expectation they had of something, surprizingly singular, from the many promises made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that the BLESSING to mankind should spring from their seed; and, in tracing their genealogy, we see they were very critical, upon their return from Babylon; so that, before their Records were disturbed by the Captivity, it could not well be otherwise, but that every body of any note amongst the Jews could tell you the name of his Ancestor, who first had the Family-Possession, in the days of Joshua, and how many degrees, and by what descent, he was removed from him. And as these first Possessors, pursuant to the custom of the Nation, must have been described by their fathers name, 'tis highly probably, they could have quoted by name that Ancestor who saw the miracles in Egypt, who saw the LAW given, who entered into the COVENANT, and who contributed to the setting up the ARK and TABERNACLE.

4<sup>thly</sup>, THE very surprizing care taken by the Deity to keep the breed of the Jews pure, and genuine, by the proofs of VIRGINITY, and by the miraculous Waters of JEALOUSY, is a circumstance that merits attention, and will easily induce a belief that Descent and Birth was a matter much minded amongst them: And

5<sup>thly</sup>, THE appointment and observance of the Sabbatical year, and, after the seventh Sabbatical year, a year of JUBILEE, for the general release of debts, lands, &c. is a circumstance of great moment, ment, not only as these notable PERIODS were useful towards the easy computation of time, but as it made enquiry into TITLES, and consequently genealogy, necessary every fiftieth year; and as the cessation from culture, every seventh year, gave continual occasions for the Deity's displaying his power in increasing the Crop of the sixth, pursuant to his promise.

Now, taking these circumstances together under consideration, could any human precaution have provided more means to keep up the memory and evidence of any fact? Could this have been done by human foresight or force? Has any thing like to it ever been in the world besides?

WHAT could tend more to perpetuate the memory of any event, than to deliver a whole People, by publick glorious miracles, from intolerable slavery? To publish a very extraordinary system of Laws immediately from heaven? To put this Law in writing; together with the Covenant for the obeying it? To make the tenure of the possessions of the felicity of that people depend on the observance of this Law? To appoint annual solemnities for keeping the LAW, and the giving of it, in mind? To appoint signs for the hands, and frontlets for the face by way of MEMORANDUMS? To enjoin perpetual private instruction by the parent to the children? To make the tenure of the Estates depend on the original division of the Land, to men who saw the miracles, and first took possession, and on the proximity of relation by descent to them? To appoint a return of Lands every fiftieth year, which should give perpetual occasion to canvass those descents? To order a Sabbath every seventh year for the Land, the loss of which should be supplied by the preceeding year's increase? And to select a whole tribe, consisting of many thousands, to be the Guardians, in some degree the Judges and the Executors, of this LAW; who were barred from any portion of the land, in common with their brethren, and were contented with the contributions that came from the other tribes, without any fixed portion amongst them? This must keep up the belief and authority of that LAW amongst the descendants of that People, or nothing could; and if such a belief, under all these circumstances, prevailed amongst a people so constituted, that belief could not possibly proceed from imposture; because the very means provided, for proof of the truth, are so many checks against any possibility of imposition.

IF any man will suggest that the LAW of the Jews is no more than human invention, and that the Book of the LAW is a forgery, let him say when it was imposed upon that People, or at what PERIOD it possibly could have been so imposed upon them, so as to gain belief, later than the PERIOD they mention, and under other circumstances than those they relate.

COULD the whole People have been persuaded, at any one PERIOD, by any Impostor, that they were told severally by their fathers, and they by theirs, that the LAW was given with such circumstances, and under such promises, and threats, if they were not really told so; or that they, throughout all their generations, had worn certain passages of the LAW by way of FRONTLETS and SIGNS, if it had not really been so?

COULD the whole People have been persuaded to submit to the pain of death, upon all the Offences the LAW makes capital, unless their fathers had done so, upon evidence of the authority of that LAW?

COULD the whole People have been persuaded that they had kept exact Genealogies, in order to entitle them to the blessing, and to their inheritances severally, unless they actually had done so?

COULD the whole People believe that they had kept PASSOVERS, Feasts of TABERNACLES, &c. down from the date of the LAW, commemorative of the great events they relate to, unless they had really done so?

COULD the Children of Israel have been imposed on to receive an ARK, and a TABERNACLE, then forged, and a compleat set of SERVICE and LITURGY, as descending from Moses by the direction of God, unless that ARK and that SERVICE had come to them from their Ancestors, as authorized by God?

COULD the whole People have submitted to pay TITHE, FIRST-FRUITS, &c. upon any feigned revelation? Or COULD the Tribe of Levi, without divine authority, have submitted not only to the being originally without a portion in Israel, but to the being incapable of any, in hopes of the contributions of the people; which, however large, when the whole twelve Tribes served at the same Temple, became very scanty, when ten of them withdrew their allegiance from heaven?

COULD ever the **Book of the LAW*, if consigned to the Levites, and promulgated, have been lost, so as to give room for new fictions:
Or

* N. B. The Book of the LAW found in the days of Josias was the Copy of the COVENANT in the hand of Moses.

Or could a Book of the LAW have been forged, if there was none precedent, and put upon the People, as a book that had been delivered to the Levites by Moses; if no book at all ever was delivered by him to them, what authority could be pretended for such a book?

HAD a book been to be forged, in order to be received by the People, could it have contained so many scandalous reflections and accusations against the People, and so many fatal threats and predictions concerning them; and, if it had been so framed, would it have been received as authentick?

IF the LAW, &c. was forged, it must have been before the days of David; because by the sacred hymns, in his time, the publication of the LAW is celebrated, and the LAW was observed: And yet the time between the entry of Israel into the Land, and the reign of David, being but about four hundred years, is too short a space for forgetting the real manner of that Entry, and forging another to be received by a People, whose genealogy was so fixed, and whose time was reckoned by such PERIODS.

IF the Book of the LAW was not forged before the reign of David, it could not possibly be forged after, unless the whole history of the kingdom, the tabernacle, the temple, and all the sacred hymns and prophecies, are looked upon as one compleat fiction. Because the tabernacle, the temple, the œconomy of the kingdom, the sacred hymns and all the other Writings, said to be sacred, bear formal relation to the LAW.

BUT that all these things were not supposititious, is evident from the anxious zeal that possessed the Jews who returned from the Captivity; from their sollicitude to restore the city, the temple, and the sacred service; from their strict examination of their genealogies, and scrupulous care to comply with the LAW.

THE space between the captivity and the return was so short, that some who saw the first temple saw also the second, and many who were themselves, or at least whose fathers had been, Officers in the first temple, returned to the service of the second: So that it is utterly impossible that the history, the liturgy, the service of the Jews, preceding the return, should be a fiction, at least that it should be a fiction, earlier than the return.

AND the story of this nation, from that PERIOD, falls in so much with the history of the rest of the world; their sacred books have been so soon after that translated, and they have been so famous for the tenaciousness of their LAWS, that there is no possibility of suspecting that their LAW and History was forged later than the return.

AND, if it is granted that the devotions, the precepts, the institutions, and rites and ceremonies, of this LAW, and the great lines of their History are not forged, one needs, as to the present consideration, be but little solicitous concerning the accuracy of the Copy of the Books of the LAW, and of the other sacred books; and whether there may not have been some mistakes or interpolations. It is not with one or one hundred words or sentences we have to do; it is with the system of the SACRIFICATURE, and the other religious laws and services of the Jews, and with the political establishment of their Theocratical government, and the authority for the establishment of both, that we have, at present, concern.

FOR if such a system of religious services and ceremonies was revealed and commanded by God; if, for the greater certainty it was reduced into writing by Moses, by divine direction; if such a model of government was framed, as is manifestly calculated for keeping up the observance of those services, and preserving the memory of the institution and keeping up the authority of the book wherein it is recorded; and if the nation, to whom this institution was delivered, have preserved it accordingly; compleat evidence thence arises to us of the Divinity of the institution, which confirms what has already been deduced from nature, and the history of the world, concerning REVEALED RELIGION, and leads to a demonstrative proof of the truth of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION, to which all the emblematical institutions tend, and in which they center.

AND, if one can but be once satisfied that this people was chosen and constituted, in a way surprizingly particular, principally for preserving the ORACLES of GOD, the religion revealed by him to men, and the evidence thereof; one shall have little difficulty to believe that they were reasonably exact in this particular.

ESPECIALLY, if he recollects the absolute scrupulosity with which they preserve the sacred Books, not having dared since the days of Jesus Christ, tho' their disputes with the Christians gave them the strongest temptation, to alter a letter, or to insert in the text used in their Synagogues those very POINTS, which they have contrived to vary the signification of the words to serve their purposes; tho' all of them say, and most of them believe, these POINTS to be of divine original.

BUT the matter does not rest singly upon the presumption of accuracy and fidelity in the Jews. We have a translation made, near two hundred years before Christ, into Greek; and, by comparing that Version with the Hebrew kept by the Jews, the diversities are not so many or so material as to make any difference in the sense and tendency of the whole. They may all have flowed from the ignorance or carelessness of interpreters, and from mistakes and accidents incident to Copyers; and, where there is any diversity, it is easy to judge on which side the mistake lies, and the error must naturally be imputed to the Translation, which cannot be presumed to have been handled with so great care and reverence as the Original.

AND we have, besides, an Hebrew Copy of the Pentateuch kept by the Samaritans, mortal enemies to the Jews, and who would not probably cooperate with them towards any fraud. This Copy, a very few immaterial things excepted, is literally the same with that of the Jews; and as the Pentateuch contains the very kernel, and the standing proof of that revelation which supports the Christian Religion, it seems to be the direct act of providence for confirming the truth of that important piece of Revelation. That the Cuthians succeeded the ten tribes, and that they took up so much of their Religion as had been retained by these tribes, after their defection from the house of David, and preserved as sacred the Pentateuch, which would have been a check upon the Jews, had they falsified theirs; And is a confirmation of the truth, as they have not, out of the mouth of enemies, at least of such as were in no confederacy with them.

AND the existence of a Copy of the Pentateuch in the hands of the Samaritans, who must have had it from the ten tribes, and they again must have retained it from the days of Jeroboam's revolt, is a proof not only that that book, as it now stands, was extant, and the standard of the Israelitish sacred service and faith in the days of David and Solomon, but also that all the Copies of the Pentateuch were not lost, as is foolishly supposed, in the days of Josiah; this one being then, clearly, amongst the revolted tribes as the rule of the faith and practice of such of them as had not bowed their knee to Baal. Besides many thousands that, probably, were in the hands of the Levites, and scattered over Judah and Benjamin; so that the

Copy of the LAW found in the temple, in the time of Josiah, was the Copy of the COVENANT in the hand of Moses, as the text asserts, and not the Copy of the Pentateuch.

THESE reflections put the divine authority of the Jewish Institution beyond all doubt, they shew it was the indispensable duty of the Jews to obey and observe it; and prove demonstrably, that it would be our duty, as well as theirs, to comply with the same institution and observances, unless these shall appear to have been superseded and changed by the same divine authority.

AND it is an Event that calls loudly for our attention, that this institution, established solemnly by God, has ceased; the temple, chosen for his residence, has been destroyed; and his own peculiar People, whose head and protector he was to have been, and was bound by Covenant to be, have been utterly unpeopled and scattered near 1700 years ago.

TO obtain satisfaction on this head, it is fit to recollect that almost all the Jewish religious service consisted in external emblematical acts, rites, and observances, which, in themselves, and but for the institution, and what was intended to be represented by them, served for no good purpose.

THE Hebrew word translated the LAW, carries not in it, properly, the idea of authority enjoining or commanding, but is taken from a word that signifies, originally, to demonstrate, to direct, to point out, the way; and all the precepts, commands, statutes, ordinances, and appointments, come promiscuously under that word which we translate LAW.

IT must be remembered, that throughout all the sacred Hebrew writings, as well in the LAW, as in the HISTORY, HYMNS, and PROPHECIES, many matters concerning the LAW are declared by the Deity, and sentiments expressed which regulate the understanding, end, and meaning of it.

NOTHING is more distinct than the several Institutions, the positive, and negative Precepts of the LAW, if no more than the outward operation or observance is in question; but we find that, throughout the SCRIPTURES, and particularly the book of PSALMS, it was not, singly, the practice of the Precepts, but the meditation on them day and night, that was the duty and delight of those that feared God; it was their prayer to be made to understand, to be taught them; it was the duty of the Priest, and the Prince in a particular manner, and and it was the exprefs command of God to Joshua, to meditate in the Law day and night, then should he do wisely.

IT is no wonder that the LAW required meditation to unravel the true end and meaning of it; since, to instance in one particular, the principal Institution of it, to wit SACRIFICE, in itself had no vertue at all, and it was contrary to common sense and reason it should have any.

IT is not only contrary to common sense, that sacrifice should have any effect towards removing sin, and placating the Deity: But the same God, who instituted sacrifice, tells over and over again the people, to whom he gave that Institution, that he has no pleasure in sacrifice, that the blood of goats cannot atone for sin, that their sacrifices were useless towards the ends for which they imagined them profitable.

WHAT then must the religious Jews, who believed that sacrifice was of divine institution, who believed at the same time that it was of no effect towards pardoning sin and procuring favour, and who were bound to meditate on the depths, the hidden things of the Law, conclude? And what must we conclude who believe as they did? Can we conclude otherways than that this uncouth, unnatural, observance, unprofitable and ineffectual in itself, was appointed to commemorate or point out something, emblematically, that the Deity was desirous to have pointed out and kept in mind?

As one great end of the religious institution, and of the frame of the common-wealth of the Jews, was to keep up perpetually the ordinance of SACRIFICATURE; another great end was to preserve, with proper evidence and authority, all the revelations and providences of God, recorded by Moses and the other inspired Writers.

WE know, then, certainly from the revelation made by God and preserved by the Jews;

THAT God was to be merciful to man; that he promised The seed of the woman should bruise the head of the serpent, and that the seed of the serpent should bruise his heel:

THAT SACRIFICE was coeval with this revelation, or near it; Abel sacrificed acceptably:

THAT blood-shed was deemed holy; and sprinkling that blood the mean, and outward symbol, of making every thing on which it was sprinkled, the Priest, the Altar, the Ark, &c. holy:

THAT, when God first declared his purpose of selecting Abraham and his family, and made a COVENANT with him to multiply his seed as the stars of heaven, and to give them the land of Canaan, he, at the same time, and with the same breath, declared that, in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed.

THAT the same declaration was often repeated to Abraham, and to his successors Isaac and Jacob, which became the foundation of the hopes and expectations of their descendants; made them carefully preserve their genealogies; and greatly value themselves on being of the seed of those men, of whose seed should come THAT wherein all the families of the earth should be blessed.

THAT the first part of the COVENANT or Promise was literally, and in a very marvellous manner, fulfilled; The Israelites were miraculously put, and kept in possession of the land of Canaan; But, whilst they staid there, the second part was not performed, nor will they admit that it is to this hour performed:

THAT tho' this second part was not performed, whilst the Nation remained in possession of the first part of the promise, yet it was perpetually kept in view, and fresh hopes, by repeated promises, given of the same blessing under very extraordinary descriptions.

THE Sceptre was not to depart from Judah until Shilo came, and to him was to be the gathering of people.

THE Throne was to be established with the seed of David for ever; the Covenant was established with him; and of this SEED of his, such marvellous things spoken, as do not agree to any of his carnal successors. or to any meer man.

THIS Son of David goes under the name of the Anointed of the Lord, and this anointed one is said to be also the Son of God, the King Anointed on the holy hill of Sion. I will declare the decree, the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee.

A Virgin was to conceive and to bring forth a son, whose name was to be Emanuel. A new thing was to happen in the earth, a woman was to compass a man, Jer. xxxi. 22.

To the house of Israel a Child was to be born, to them a son was given, the government was to be on his shoulder: and his name was to be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there was to be no end, upon the throne of David, &c. Is. ix. 7.

A rod was to come forth of the stem of Jesse, which should stand for an ensign to the people, and to which all the Gentiles should seek, whose rest was to be glorious.

NUMEROUS are the promises and predictions of peace and salvation, to come not only to the Jews, but to all nations, by a mighty CONQUEROR, a great PRINCE, who is to sit on the throne of David; who is called David [i. e. the beloved] in prophecies delivered hundreds of years after king David's death; who was to rule in peace, to lead, and to defend, his people; who is called The righteousness, The holiness, The salvation of Jehovah, The righteous servant of the Lord, who is to deliver Israel from their sins; who is to be a Light, is to be Salvation to the Gentiles; who is given for a Covenant to the people, who is to restore peace and joy to Mankind; a fountain is to be opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin, and for uncleanness.

The Righteous Servant of the Lord is to suffer for Mankind, for the sins of the people; he is to bear their iniquities, to be bruised, for them; to be unjustly condemned in judgment, and to suffer death, to make his body an offering for sin: but he was to divide a portion with the great, &c. because he had exposed his body unto death, and he was numbered with the transgressors, and made intercession for the transgressors.

THIS extraordinary person, who was to do those wondrous things, is described as sitting on the right hand of God; as the fellow of God, against whom the sword was to be employed to smite him; and the people were, at last, to look upon him whom they had pierced; and to mourn for him as one mourneth for his eldest son: But this was not to be till the spirit of prayer and supplication should be poured out on the house of David, and on the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

Messiah the anointed one, the Prince was to be cut off, at a determined period, but not for himself.

AND many, and various, predictions are scattered every where throughout the sacred Writings, that the Jews shall be rejected, and the Gentiles called to the service of God, and to enjoy the blessings promised to Israel.

THESE several, wonderful, predictions and promises, with many more of the same kind, could not possibly be overlooked by the Jews; or thought to relate to any thing but the great, the important, branch of the original COVENANT with Abraham, not performed when the Nation was in possession of the land, to wit, that in his seed all the nations nations of the earth were to be blessed. This was too considerable a part of the COVENANT to be overlooked, or to remain unperformed; And it is no wonder that the Jews, from it, and from these several predictions, promises, and declarations, that related to it, expected with confidence that blessing to all nations in the MESSIAH, who was to be of the seed of David.

TAKING, then, all these predictions and promises together, and joining them with the original COVENANT made with Abraham, it is as clear as the sun's light, that the extraordinary person promised, and described to be the son of David, and the son of God, the anointed one, the beloved, was the seed promised to Abraham, in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed.

AND, therefore, the Jews, who believed the SCRIPTURE to be infallible truth, were insuperably determined to believe this extraordinary person, whom they call the MESSIAH, was to come; and we, who believe the same SCRIPTURE to be the word of God, must necessarily conclude that he either is come, or is to come; or else we must admit that God has given his authority to the belief of a falsehood, which is monstrously absurd.

THE Jews may value themselves as much as they please on their being the favourite people, and may flatter themselves in the opinion that the MESSIAS was intended peculiarly for them, and that the COVENANT with Abraham, and the whole structure of, and divine providence about, their law and nation, was meant only, and primarily, for them: But we, of the Nations, beg leave to differ with them, and to insist that, in the seed of Abraham all the Nations of the earth, and amongst them we, were to be blessed. That their MESSIAS was to be the Light of the Nations; that he was given for a COVENANT to all people; and that he was to bring salvation to all men.

AND we must observe, that all that part of the COVENANT that regarded the land of Canaan, and the Jewish people in particular, was conditional, forfeitable upon breach of COVENANT by the Jews; and actually forfeited, as they themselves must own, and as their own Scriptures testify: Whereas the promise of blessing to the Nations, in the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is absolute, and unconditional, and believed necessarily to be performed, whatever came of the Jewish law and common-wealth.

THE City and Government of the Jews is now destroyed, and dissolved; they are unpeopled, as we may say, and remain scattered up and down the face of the earth ; their system of religious service is now no more practised, nor practicable ; no man can trace his descent from Aaron, so no man amongst them can lawfully shed blood ; nor can any prove his descent from David, so none can know the MESSIAH by his pedigree, were he yet to come. It is near 1700 Years since the temple, to which the Messenger of the Covenant was to come, is destroyed utterly ; And yet the Jews will neither admit that the MESSIAS is come, nor that their Scripture is false, which is very extraordinary.

IT was equally the Interest of the Nations, as of the Jews, to have looked out for the advent of the MESSIAS ; but they did not know what concern they had in that event, and therefore could not be solicitous about it. The Jews were justly solicitous about it, and had all the marks, and tokens, given by infallible Revelation, by which to know it ; but, in pursuance to the blindness predicted to themselves, they did not see it.

IT is an amazing providence that the Jews, who looked for the MESSIAH, did not see or receive him when he came ; and that the Gentiles, who knew little, and had no expectation of him, saw and received him, and in him the  blessing : This is surprizing, but it did not happen by chance, it was predicted by Moses and the Prophets.

Daniel had fixed a determined Time for the Advent of the MESSIAH ; the whole Nation knew it, and expected him, about the time he came ; their expectations ran so high, that the Confidence founded upon them pulled on their ruin, and final destruction. The MESSIAS came when they expected him, and yet they knew him so little, that they became his Executioners, and put him to death as a blasphemer.

IN Jacob's blessing to Judah, or rather prophecy concerning him, the Scepter was not to depart from Judah, nor the Lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh came ; and all the Jews, by Shiloh, understood the MESSIAS.

IN Daniel's Prophecy the advent of the MESSIAH, who is to be cut off, is to be followed by the utter destruction of the City, the temple, the law, the commonwealth, of the Jews.

THO' the Jews were so blind as not to see the MESSIAS when he came, but, instead of receiving him, to cut him off ; It is astonishing that, when they had cut him off, when they saw their city, their temple temple, their commonwealth, and their holy service, at an end, they did not see their mistake, and look to him whom they had pierced.

IF the Scepter was not to depart from Judah till Shiloh came, it is a necessary consequence that, if the Scepter is actually departed; Shiloh must certainly be come.

AT the time predicted, and when the Jews expected the MESSIAH, a Man of the tribe of Judah, and family of David, appeared in Judea, preaching repentance and remission of sins: He declared he was the MESSIAS, the son of God, sent to save Mankind; and, as an evidence of his Mission, wrought in the sight of the people great numbers of amazing miracles; He opened the eyes of the blind, and the ears of the deaf, he restored speech to the dumb, and health to multitudes of sick persons by his single fiat; He said he came to fulfill, and put an end to, the Law, to die for the sins of mankind; He taught as never man taught: But, being in a form too humble and lowly for the Expectations of the Jews, he was arraigned of high treason against the Roman power, and of high treason against the head of the Jewish commonwealth, that is Blasphemy; was tryed, convicted upon his own acknowledgment that he was the son of God, and ignominiously crucified, and buried: And tho' he did not use his Divine power to avoid that death, which he said he was to undergo, yet he ever had that power to confirm his own promise that he was to rise again the third day; he rose, instructed the Disciples he had elected, and ascended into heaven, having first promised to send the HOLY SPIRIT, the COMFORTER, who was accordingly sent, and filled the Apostles, and Disciples.

As the Jews, that is the High Priest and the Nation, not knowing this Person, put him to death for pretending to be the MESSIAH, it is but natural to think they would for some time persist in their opinion, and therefore they made use of all means to justify their own opinion and conduct, to weaken his Credit, to make him pass upon the world for an Impostor, and to oppose the propagation of his doctrine.

As the heathen world was at that time deep sunk in ignorance and superstition, and, where Superstition did not prevail, strongly byassed to Atheism, the philosophy of Epicurus; it was against all probability that the surprizing, the self-denying, doctrine of Jesus should prevail.

NEVERTHELESS in less than 300 years, in spite of the fierce opposition of the Jews, in spite of the many Persecutions from the Roman Emperors, who were then Lords of the whole known earth, in spite of the ignorance and weakness of, the first followers of Christ, the Apostles, who were chosen of the lowest rank of the people, the doctrine of that crucified Jesus so far prevailed, as to become the religion of the whole known world, (the Jews excepted:) such influence had the teaching of the HOLY SPIRIT, and the Miracles wrought.

IF any man shall wantonly think fit to call in question (notwithstanding the evidence) that miracles were wrought, and shall averr that none were performed; let him consider whether, on that Supposition, it is not a miracle, and evidence of Divine power beyond all cavilling, that this doctrine, in the hands of such men, against such opposition, prevailed over mankind in so short a space, without the assistance of any power but the power of God, and the proofs brought from the Scriptures.

THE doctrine taught by the followers of Jesus was that he was the Son of God, the promised MESSIAH; that he came, pursuant to the COVENANT of GRACE, to shed his blood for the remission of Sins; that pardon and grace was thereby to be had; that the LAW served only to point him out, and describe him; and that the blood of Sacrifices were but emblems, and types, of his blood; who, having therein washed mankind from their sins, was for ever to make intercession for such as believed, and expected mercy.

THIS doctrine prevailed early over such of the Jews as waited humbly for the Salvation of God, and whose notions were not totally debauched; It prevailed over such of the Gentiles as retained notions of atonement by blood; but it made no progress among the hardened Jews who crucified their MESSIAH, who by all arts whatever except falsifying the text of their sacred Books, endeavoured to stifle the new doctrine, and keep their own in countenance; tho' it is highly astonishing it should not have prevailed over them, when their city and temple were rased, and when it became the light of the Gentile world.

IT is easy, by running over the many typical and prophetical predictions in the LAW and the PROPHETS, and shewing the harmony and accomplishment in the Person of Jesus, to heighten the demonstration of the truth of the Christian Religion, and the amazement at the surprizing hardness of the Jews; but, postponing that for a little, can any man, from what has been already stated, doubt that the Christian Religion is that pointed out by the Judaick dispensation, and that it is Divine, unless he admit that the Judaick dispensation is a pure forgery, or that the Deity can fail in fulfilling his Promises?

OR, can any man reflect on the blindness and obstinacy of the Jews in shutting out the light which shone amongst themselves, and which from them only shone out to the rest of the world, without observing the immediate finger of God in this astonishing event which hapned, being predicted?

CONSIDERING with due attention these circumstances, it is impossible not to perceive skill, much greater than human contrivance, as well as power Divine, in preparing and furnishing evidence for the truth of the Christian Religion; or, which is the same thing, the Doctrine of pardon and mercy through the blood of Christ.

THIS doctrine, not resulting from nature or reason, is not capable of proof à Priori, or from reason, and therefore must depend on evidence external, as other matters of fact do.

MIRACLES, or the immediate interposition of Almighty Power controuling the common course of nature, may be proof of revelation; but the proof of those miracles may decay, by length of time, and by degrees, unless some very extraordinary mean is used by the Deity to preserve the proof of such Miracles.

PREDICTION of natural events that do not depend upon a certain, unchanging, course of nature is, when the event happens, proof that the Prophet had his Prediction from heaven.

PREDICTION of miraculous or supernatural events, when these events happen, is the highest evidence of the Intervention of the Deity; and, if one can be certain that the event was predicted and accordingly hapned, no doubt at all can remain the Prediction and the Event were both from God; and, supposing such a thing to have hapned for the confirmation of any doctrine, the only requisite to perpetuate that proof to posterity would be to provide such a history of the prediction and accomplishment, as could not, justly, be suspected, or called in question.

THE chief causes for denying assent to the truth of facts recorded in history are,

THAT the Historian may have been ill informed, and may have taken what he wrote without sufficient evidence;

THAT

THAT the Historian may be single, unsupported by any other collateral evidence, in which case his veracity may be questioned; and,

THAT the History, in length of time, may be vitiated, interpolated, or altered, to be accommodated to prevailing notions or opinions.

Now, if the sacred Institution, and civil Oeconomy, of the seed of Abraham is considered as calculated to receive, to preserve, and to communicate, the revelation of the good will of God to Man, it furnishes a testimony to that truth superior to all doubt, and to any other evidence that ever supported a matter of fact.

THE Historian could not be deceived; the miracles related were wrought in his and in the sight of the whole people, and many of them not single acts, but reiterated, some repeated for forty years together.

THE Historian cannot be looked upon to be single; (I consider the whole People as joint historians attesting the truth of Moses's relations) what he relates was done in the sight of many hundreds of thousands; they all agree the relation to be fact; they receive his account of it, hold it certain and sacred; observe the precepts; expect the promises; submit to the sanction; and hold their whole land, the possession of each individual, and the offices in the Church and State, by that tenure.

THE suspicion of any alteration, or interpolation, to promote any favourite point or opinion, is absolutely excluded by the religious reverence had, at all times, for the sacred Book; by the many reproaches every where to be met with therein against the Jews, which their scrupulosity prevented their meddling with; and by the many predictions not only of those mischiefs to the Nation, which hapned to them before the sacred Book went out of their own hands, and language, into other hands, and languages, but of those mischiefs also which hapned, some hundreds of years after the scriptures were published in foreign languages, and continue to happen at this day; I mean, their rejecting the MESSIAH, and putting him to death, the subversion of the state and temple, and their dispersion, blindness, and obstinacy: for I take it to be an event of all others the most surprising, and the least to be accounted for from the nature of things, That the Jews should continue under such circumstances, and in such numbers as they are, firm even to death in the belief of their

Scriptures, and the hopes of a MESSIAH, and yet blind and obstinate to madness in rejecting that MESSIAH, whom every one that considers; but they, evidently see and with joy submit to.

HAD the nation of the Jews seen in Jesus the MESSIAH; and submitted to him, the Scriptures would not have been fulfilled.

HAD they, after his death, universally acknowledged him, as many individuals of the nation did, they, as these individuals did, laying aside all national distinctions, would have been sunk and lost in the general mass of Christians; and we should have had no more than an historical account of their having once existed, as we have of the Athenians, Spartans, Samnites, &c.

HAD this been the case; the authority of the sacred Book would have rested solely on itself; there would not have been one living witness to prove its authentickness, or to prevent the suspicion that it was forged, as the Fragments of the book of Enoch, the Testaments of the twelve Patriarchs, the Sybilline Oracles, and multitudes of other pious cheats, most certainly were:

OR had the Jewish Nation maintained its land; preserved its government, and turned Christian with the rest of the World, the books they should then exhibit as sacred would not be altogether free from suspicion: Those, who combat their truth, as they stand, would not fail to suggest that passages had been accommodated to the, then, present belief of the Nation, and that the whole might be a forgery to introduce a belief, which some impostors of that Nation had a mind to set up.

BUT, as the Jewish Nation have ever rejected, and do still continue to reject, with the utmost horror and detestation, the belief of those truths which their own books are the chief evidence of, they are the most unexceptionable witnesses that the heart or head of the most scrupulous man could wish for; it being absolutely impossible that they can concur in any fraud or fiction for the support of that doctrine which they utterly abominate.

To reflect a little, then, on the evidence of this Revelation: Here is a People chosen in the loins, as one may say, of their parents, to be, as the Deity is pleased to declare, witnesses for him; formed into a very great and a very peculiar people; distinguished by particular institutions, and by the immediate hand of God kept distinct from all the nations of the Earth; receiving directly from God revelations, institutions, predictive and emblematical, and many oracular declarations;

tions; preserved by the peculiar providence of God in possession of their land, and in the practice of those prophetic institutions for above 1500 years; believing that those predictions described an event, which was at hand, big with the greatest blessings to them, and to the whole universe, and looking out hourly for the accomplishment.

BUT when that great event happens, this singular people, obstinately blind, refusing to see it, and rejecting the benefit of it, not by accident, but in pursuance of many predictions in their own sacred book; and thereby remaining the irreproachable witnesses of the truth of the sacred Revelation, which from the beginning they were chosen to bear evidence of.

NOR is their continuing, with that qualification of witnesses, at this day less marvellous, or less the immediate act of God, than their preservation in their land, before the advent of the Messiah, formerly was.

WHO can with attention, and without prejudice, view the contrivance, the skill, the interposition of the finger of God, for so many ages, to provide, prepare, and preserve, so surprising; and so unexceptionable, a proof for his revelation of grace to mankind; and at the same time suffer himself to doubt whether all this is not imposture, purely, because God has been pleased to reveal some things that do not conform so well to his apprehensions; tho' he knows full well that his understanding is, almost in every thing, scanty and weak?

WHO can doubt that, if God intended to reveal peace and mercy to mankind, he would make the evidence of that revelation strong and permanent?

AND who can see the evidence and believe without adoring, and determining to serve, that beneficent Being, who has provided such evidence of his grace for the comfort, direction, and encouragement, of mankind, to pursue their duty, and to arrive at felicity?

EARLY, we saw man undone; unless there was some hidden method in reserve with the Deity for abolishing his sin; and in a desperate state, if hope was not created, by revealing that method, which to man must naturally be unknown.

WE saw, also, that mankind had hopes from the earliest times; that these hopes had in them some connection with the shedding of blood; and, from the universality of the hope of pardon, on that principle, we concluded it highly probable that these hopes were given, and that mean pointed out by the Deity; both the one and the

the other being not only without any countenance from, but even as some men have seemed to understand them, contrary to reason.

WE saw that if these hopes, and the mean used, were from God, there must be some standing evidence, provided by the Deity, for producing in man belief in his mercy, and the just consequences of that belief.

AND, now, we see, in fact, that such evidence is provided, which justifies the hopes and the practice of the ancient world, at the same time that it receives confirmation from them; and shews clearly that this REVELATION was given from the beginning, and that the LAW of Moses is a REPUBLICATION of it.

THIS then being, undeniably, the case; how absurd and pernicious must the sentiments and conduct be of these unlearned, but conceited, men who, without examining nature or revelation carefully, presume to decide magisterially against REVEALED RELIGION; and employ all the talents, the bountiful God of Nature has bestowed upon them, not to examine and enquire into, but to discredit and defeat, the evidence that he has, with such infinite care, provided; and thereby harden themselves, and all such whose hearts and heads are turned like theirs, in false and impious notions?

Tindal (and all who have thought, before or after him, as he does) will have the law of NATURE, that is the light of NATURE, a perfect rule for men's actions; and who doubts this? He says this light is absolutely sufficient to guide men in their conduct towards God, and towards one another; and this is no doubt also true; but, then, he concludes that this light of NATURE is, by itself, sufficient in our present state to lead us comfortably through this life to happiness in the next: But here he errs, manifestly, either from want of attention to truths which he admits, or from building on false principles, which, without due examination, he has adopted.

THAT the light of NATURE, with the instructions the first man had, was sufficient to guide him before he sinned, is certain; and that the same light, after committing that sin, was a sufficient monitor against committing more, may also be true: But how was this first Man to find out, that the first sin he committed was to be pardoned, if that God, against whom he sinned, had not told him so much? Is there any thing in NATURE to let a man know, certainly, that the infinite, the perfect, the immutable, justice of God will pardon, connive or wink at, sin, the transgression of the eternal law of order, in setting up another sovereign, without some cause, motive or consideration, of infinite moment to determine the Deity so to do? Or can NATURE find out that there was truly the interposition of such a cause?

MR. Tindal would avoid this difficulty by supposing that the light of NATURE teaches man that God is merciful, and that he will pardon, upon repentance, and a purpose of amendment; and, if this was true, his argument would go pretty far: but this is most certainly not true; the Deist borrows, in this, an article from REVEALED RELIGION, which, by ascribing to the light of NATURE, he would make use of to overthrow that very Religion that discovered it.

The light of NATURE shews the God of nature to be bountiful, good, benign, clement, beneficent and merciful, if the Idea is carried no further than a disposition not to hurt, and to relieve, proper objects of relief; but the light of NATURE does in no way shew that this perfect being is merciful to sinners, or that his clemency or beneficence can have for its object the offender against immutable justice. The ideas of indignation against sin, and punishment of trespass, are so necessarily joined with, and inseparable from, the idea of infinite, perfect, justice, that the light of NATURE, without destroying the idea of the essential justice of God, or without discovering what, without REVELATION, it could not discover, that justice was, by the interposition of an atonement of infinite consideration, to be satisfied, could not possibly frame to itself any notion that mercy was to take place, or that repentance, and purpose of amendment, were to be of any moment.

REVELATION, indeed, has altered the case; it has described God as merciful, long-suffering, patient, and pardoning transgression, upon repentance: But, then, it has reconciled that discovery to the dictates of nature, which spoke just the reverse, by intimating that an atonement has, by infinite mercy, been found out to satisfy immutable, essential, justice.

THUS do weak, presumptuous, men mislead themselves, to lull their conscience, that glimpse of the light of nature, asleep; and, to prevent the trouble it must give them, they lay hold of a principle discovered, and proved, only, by REVELATION; but, because they would not be beholden to REVELATION for it, they boldly, and falsely, averr it is deducible from REASON; and then make use of it to support an Hypothesis, of their own framing, that shall overturn that.

that REVELATION, from which the support to their Hypothesis is fought.

DEISM is not tenible without supposing remission of sin to be necessarily consequent upon repentance, and this to be discoverable by the light of NATURE. Remission does not appear from NATURE to be the consequence of repentance, but rather the contrary; the discovery and proof of this proposition is owing solely to REVELATION; and yet there are men, who would be thought wise and honest, who would be thought to believe the proposition, and yet make it the study of their lives to overthrow the evidence on which it is built.

IT would be very happy if these Gentlemen, who pique themselves so much on the study, the knowledge, the light of NATURE, entered a little more into the consideration of themselves, and of those things they so much pretend to know, and to admire; and bestowed but half the time, they take to direct others, in finding out their own condition, and what they have to hope or fear: Did they but look at their own case, they should be less wanton, less presumptuous.

WHAT man is there who, entering into himself, and comparing honestly what he now is with what man originally was, and ought to have continued, does not see the corruption, the misery, the helplessness, of his own condition? If the depravity or violence of his appetites, his lusts, or his passions, have drawn him to commit any of the more notorious crimes that disturb society, or destroy his neighbour, conscience generally interposes, and the sting is felt, till the depraved wretch harden himself by some false excuse, or by some other criminal pursuit, draw away his attention from the sore.

BUT, supposing a man, from the happy constitution with which he was born, from the advantage of a good education, to form his sentiments; or, from the kind conduct of God's providence, free from those grosser offences that fall under the censure and distaste of all honest men: Can he recollect that he is the creature of the infinitely perfect Being, that the great, the chief, end of giving him all those intellectual faculties, that distinguish him from the rest of the creation, was to contemplate the power, the wisdom, the goodness, of God in his works, and in his providence, and to admire, adore, and serve, this source of goodness, power, wisdom, and perfection; that his distinguishing felicity lay in pursuing his duty, in answering the ends for which those intellectual faculties were given; that a tribute of praise, of acknowledgment, and of thankfulness, is due to the

God

God of nature, who has mercifully and beneficently framed the heart of man, so that the very act of paying this tribute is necessarily attended with the most perfect, pure joy, serenity and satisfaction, that the human mind is capable of feeling; I say, can he recollect these things, and at the same time be conscious that he seldom, if ever, employs the talents given him to the end for which they were given; that it is not the occupation of his mind, or the joy of his heart, to contemplate or acknowledge the divine wisdom, and goodness; that the supreme good is not only not the object of the meditation of his mind, or of the pursuit of his heart, but that these faculties, and dispositions, bountifully given for those honourable and blessed ends, are monstrously misapplied to the pursuit of fleeting, perishing, if not wicked, pleasures; that the soul is so knit to, and bewitched with, those mean, unmanly, unreasonable enjoyments, which end in smoke, if not in sorrow; that there is no taste left for those sublime, permanent, pleasures, for which it was created; and that, in place of using the very refuse of one's time, what is over and above the pursuit and enjoyment of those vain comforts, to the chief end for which time was indulged, the thought of the least communication with the Creator is so painful, that all amusements, how foolish or insignificant soever, are anxiously sought after to murder time, and to divert, as 'tis called, from that exercise of the soul, and heart, wherein consists his indispensable duty, and his highest felicity; without perceiving that he is guilty of high-treason against the God of NATURE, that he is revolted from him, and has substituted in his place, and made choice of, his creatures for the object of his desires, and of his pursuits; that they are become his masters, who hold him in captivity; and he their slave, so chained to their drudgery, that he has no more capacity left to return to the enjoyment of his Maker, and to relish the pleasures that are with him for evermore; without dreading the just vengeance of the Omnipotent which may reach him here, and must reach him, unless reconciliation intervene, in the life to come; whither, he knows, the pleasures and the amusements of this life cannot follow him.

WHOEVER makes these reflections, and every living soul must, who will enter into himself and think seriously, can have no other question to exercise his mind with, but, What shall he do to be saved? And if any accident should bring to his ears that blessed piece of intelligence, that there is a way still open to the favour of God, and means provided for the pardon of sin, it is impossible the tidings should not rouse the whole of his Attention, and employ the utmost of his diligence to discover the truth of so acceptable news; which, if found to be the very will and revelation of God, must meet with the most joyful and thankful acceptance.

BUT if men will not look so far into themselves, as to see and feel their miserable condition; if they are so well contented with the pleasure they enjoy, or have in view, that they look for none other; or if their immersion in sensual satisfactions prevents their entertaining those honourable notions of the Deity, and of his service, that are contradictory to their present pursuits and scheme of life; it is no wonder they should not listen with attention to a piece of information, which, if true, breaks in upon their present happiness, sours all their pleasures, and promises in exchange, an enjoyment for which they have no taste.

MEN, so minded, cannot possibly receive the GOSPEL, or sailtoforge reasons against it; whilst those who sensibly feel the want, must with the greatest earnestness wish they may, upon due examination, find it true.

THE GOSPEL is an infallible CURE, a glorious MEDICINE, tho' of a bitter relish to many palates, for the most obstinate, the most dangerous disease. A MEDICINE coveted, however, notwithstanding its harshness, and greedily swallowed by those who feel the anguish of the disease, or dread the danger; but nauseated and rejected by those who are sensible of no ailment, and believe themselves to be in health. It is one of the hardest things in the world, to persuade Madmen to come under the regimen necessary for their cure, because it is impossible to convince them they are mad; a madman, however, can by violence be compelled to the taking of medicine, but the GOSPEL must be sought after, and taken voluntarily, and wishfully, before it can do any good.

THE whole want no PHYSICIAN, and those who think themselves so, believe they want none. It is otherwise with the sick, who in proportion as they feel agony, are impatient, and earnest for relief.

THEY begin at the wrong end, who, to persuade a DEIST to receive the GOSPEL, attempt first to prove the excellence and infallibility of it: If he is satisfied, he has no occasion for it, he cannot be brought to examine sufficiently, and to weigh the proof. Convince a man, who dislikes the only medicine that can cure him, that he

he is dangerously ill, he will hear you patiently on the subject of the remedy, and submit to make use of it, be it ever so unpalatable; if you cannot convince him that he stands in need of it, he is incurable.

As some men are so thoroughly corrupted, as to like the wretched state in which they are, better than that, in the possession whereof the highest felicity their nature is capable of consists; they are so weak, and at the same time so conceited, as to think they can persuade others, who do feel this misery, and pant after relief, that they are in perfect health, and want no remedy; and, by doing so, expose themselves to the pity, if not to the indignation, of those who are conscious of their own misery; and with joy hope for relief from means that these men endeavour to traduce, and abuse.

THE whole of the DEIST's scheme is, as he imagines, built upon REASON, and so far as right reason goes, the CHRISTIAN agrees with him; but the difference between them is this, The DEIST maintains, that nothing is to be admitted but what he can assign a proper reason for, or, in other words, what falls in with the ideas which he has, or has made for himself; whereas the humble CHRISTIAN, believes that there are things of which he neither has, nor can have, adequate ideas; that things may be true, tho' he does not justly know how, or why, they are so; and that, for the reality and truth of such things as do not depend upon reason, or fall within his knowledge, he must depend upon such evidence as is sufficient to induce the belief of any matter of fact.

WHEN one considers how little we know of matter which we see, feel, and taste, and on which we have tried so many thousand EXPERIMENTS; how undeniably every system, forged by the wit and industry of the greatest GENIUSES, and believed for some time, has been overthrown by succeeding EXPERIMENTS; what amazing, nay seemingly contradictory effects, the CHYMIST every day sees produced in his Laboratory, by very simple mixtures; and how certain we are, that hitherto we, from our reason, have discovered nothing of the first principles of MOTION, and that MECHANISM which supports our selves and this system; when one recollects that we know nothing at all of the nature of our own soul, and are incapable of framing any idea of it, or of any other spirit; and when one reflects how infinitely above our comprehension the Deity must be; it is impossible not to be astonished at the presumptuous folly of those men who would set up their knowledge for the standard, and test, of every thing, divine and human; who by it would define the nature, and manner of existence, of the incomprehensible Deity; who by it, would determine and regulate HIS views, HIS designs, HIS actions; and who, by it, take upon them to judge of the wisdom and justice of HIS designs and actions, contrary to what HE has declared about them; tho' it is demonstratively certain, that they cannot be sure they know the causes of, or motives to those designs or actions.

RIDICULOUS as this fond conceit of the sufficiency of REASON and human KNOWLEDGE is, INFIDELITY finds in it one of its chief supports. Many facts are related, many things are revealed, that do not quadrate with the notions men have framed to themselves, which they call knowledge. Each of these creates an objection, which the Objector, taking to be unanswerable, does not give himself the trouble to look for an answer to; and the same weight is laid upon the Point's being inconsistent with his notions, or not accountable for by his knowledge, as if it was a manifest contradiction to right reason: though every one must see the difference between a contradiction in terms, an absolute inconsistency in the thing itself, and an inconsistency between a thing, and the notions a man has framed on that subject, or even the incapacity of framing a distinct notion of the thing itself.

VANITY, selfishness, an affectation of gaining more knowledge than the Creator thought fit to allow, was the cause of the ruin of our first parents; and a false, presumptuous opinion, of the sufficiency and extent of the knowledge their descendants are possessed of, is the cause of their continuing in misery to this day: Preferring knowledge, in expectation, to the favour of God, undid the first rational creatures; setting up the OPINION of knowledge against the revealed WILL of God, fastens the calamity upon their unhappy children.

IT is however surprizing, that men, who are so fond of, and lay so much stress on knowledge, are not more careful to lay up a sufficient stock of it. A late noted writer against Christianity, gave himself the trouble to pick up so much Hebrew learning, as was, in his opinion, sufficient to call in question the application of a few particular passages of the Old Testament to the MESSIAH, and seemed to think that his labours had overthrown the whole evidence that arises from the Old Testament to support the New; without knowing what a little more learning, and unbiassed attention, would have shew'd him; him; that the evidence does not depend on a few texts, that the whole system of the Jewish institution, every rite, ceremony, and sacrifice, was predictive; and that the chief scope of all the hymns, and prophecies, was to explain and apply those predictions.

To frame a true notion of any thing, one must consider it altogether, and examine all the parts of it; a just idea can never be got of any object by viewing only scraps of it, and considering it by halves.

So fares it with revelation, and the evidence of it. No man who has considered the whole with due care, and has thereby framed a true idea of it, ever did, or ever will reject it; whereas he who will frame an opinion from a partial consideration only, can hardly fail to make a mistake.

It has been taken notice, as an objection of vast consequence, against the evidence drawn from the Old Testament to support the New, that all the promises and threats, to enforce obedience to the LAW, are every one temporal, relating to the goods and evils of this life, to the enjoyment, or forfeiture of the land of Canaan; to prosperity or adversity in this world, without the least mixture of any consideration that relates to the life to come; and thence it has been concluded, that the Jews had no expectation given them of future happiness; that the Sadduces, who denied the resurrection, found nothing to contradict them in their sacred Books; and that a religion so framed, could not be intended to introduce or lead to the CHRISTIAN.

THE observation which gives rise to the objection, is undoubtedly true: the end of the whole of the Jewish institution, sacred and civil, was, sufficiently to reveal, and preserve to future generations sufficient evidence of that REVELATION. The way chosen by the Deity to preserve the evidence, was to select a particular people; to make them all witnesses of the miracles that demonstrate the certainty of the revelation; to establish among them such observances, throughout all their generations, as should commemorate and predict; to reduce his Will into writing, for the greater certainty; to give them the keeping of that writing; to lay before them the strongest motives, that, as a people or nation, they were capable of; to keep up unviolated these observances; and to preserve untouched his written will; to promise to give, and to keep them in possession of the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey; to engage to reside amongst them, and to direct and protect them from all harm, and to favour them with all national blessings; and to threaten them with all national ills if they failed in keeping his LAW, that is, preserving the evidence of his REVELATION.

AND, to make those motives the stronger, we see that the Deity was pleased to enter into a formal covenant with the whole people, as a PEOPLE, which bound him to the performance of all these articles; upon condition, however, that the people performed, on their part; and bound the people, absolutely, to the keeping and observance of his LAW, with a formal submission to the threatenings and denunciations of ruin and destruction, if they failed in the performance of their part, to which they explicitly consented, by pronouncing the curses against themselves if they disobeyed.

AND, in fact, we observe that God performed, literally, his part of this agreement; with mighty power he introduced, and maintained, this people in possession of the promised land; he resided in the midst of them; he cherished them when they kept his LAW; and chastised them when they were remiss in his service: when their rulers, their princes, and nobles, sought after other gods, and slighted his service, the NATION, as such, was delivered to slavery; when they returned in their hearts to their duty, they were restored to their land, and became again a NATION; but when they nationally corrupted themselves, forgot the end of the LAW, framed to themselves unworthy notions about their God, his REVELATION, and SALVATION, which by the whole law was predicted, and carried their perverse imaginations so high, as to put to death, as a malefactor, the DELIVERER of mankind; then God executed the threats, to which the people by covenant had agreed; he dispersed, and blinded them; and, by preserving them still under that DISPERSION and BLINDNESS, preserves the evidence of the REVELATION as strongly and clearly, as it was preserved by them whilst a NATION, in possession of the promised land.

THE COVENANT, then, with the people, was literal; all the promises annexed to the performance, on their part, were literal, and literally performed; the end the Deity had in making that COVENANT is obvious, and has manifestly been attained: but will it from thence follow, that the LAW itself, with all the emblematical rites, ceremonies, and institutions, had no higher meaning, did not speak a language very intelligible to every individual Jew, who had a soul to be be saved, and who, from those divine institutions, was to discover the will of God, and conceive hopes of mercy and forgiveness; or that the observing and meditating on this LAW, so often recommended to every individual, was not necessarily to lead them to the knowledge of God, and to the expectation of his favour, in a future state?

To satisfy one's self about this, no more is necessary than to look into the history, and the other sacred writings of the Jews, where the religious sentiments of inspired men, the declarations of the Deity, the professions, prayers, and confessions of the church, sufficiently shew what each individual was to see and believe, and what the wise and the devout did believe: Comparing the law with these things, one has a KEY to decypher the typical institutions, and a certain explication of all that it behoves us to know of the Mosaick institution; and it will evidently appear, that the Mosaick institution, which is no more than a REPLICATION of the REVELATION and institutions, originally given to Adam, together with the accounts he gives of things, contain a full discovery of all that MAN was to know, and to believe, concerning God, and himself, that was not discoverable by the light of nature, so much prized, and idolized; of late.

IF one, from the reflections already made, is satisfied that the LAW of Moses is from God, and that the Jewish SCRIPTURES contain the REVELATION of the Will of the Deity, recorded and preserved with such industry and evidence, not for the sake of the Jews, but for the sake of all mankind, he must look upon them as an inestimable treasure, stored with important truth; and cannot think any pains, bestowed in perusing and understanding them, lost; or any thing from them discovered, to be trivial or doubtful.

A CYPHER is, in itself, obscure; make use of the KEY, it becomes intelligible; and, if by so doing it becomes clear and intelligible, you are certain you have the right KEY.

THE scriptural rites, institutions, and ceremonies, are emblematical, and therefore, in some degree, obscure; find out but a KEY to explain the meaning of those EMBLEMS, that shall make all sense, and truth, and you are sure your KEY is a true one.

THE ancients recorded their sentiments, their actions, hieroglyphically, that is, emblematically, by figures of things animate or inanimate, expressive of their meaning; the KEY to, or DICTIONARY, if one

one may so term it, of those EMBLEMS is now lost; and, if it could be recovered, would certainly explain those Egyptian antiquities still preserved. To us that sort of writing is obscure, but it was not so to the Egyptians who made use of it: and it can with as little reason be imagined, that the emblematical religious service, instituted by God, was obscure, or not perfectly understood by those who were commanded to observe it, and for whose comfort and instruction it was established; on the contrary, it could not answer the end, if it was not plain and intelligible.

IT has been already observed, that all men are not alike sagacious, and consequently not alike qualified for discovering, and knowing, their misfortune, their duty, their felicity; and that the REVELATION of the will of God, to be perfect, must be such as should accommodate itself to all, and tend to lead all to their duty; a consequence whereof it is, that MEMORIALS should be established, even of things discoverable by the light of Nature, by the penetrating, for the use of the less clear-sighted, if reflection on those things was to be of universal use.

THE SCRIPTURES are the most ancient of all writings extant; the language in which they are wrote, is now no more, and has not for 2000 years been in common use; and there is not a line of that language, now in being, but what is contained in the sacred Books.

WITHOUT the assistance of the Greek translation, and some other paraphrases, and helps from later languages, the Hebrew Scriptures, though in our hands, would be altogether useless to us.

AND therefore we must reverence the divine providence, that made the Babylonish Captivity, and the Dispersion that followed upon it, which drove multitudes of the Jews into foreign countries, where they forgot their own, and learned the prevailing, the Greek language, the instrument or occasion of procuring that translation, by which we can certainly decypher the Hebrew, and come at the perfect knowledge of almost all the SCRIPTURE, at least of so much of it as is necessary for the great END God had in view, the evidence of the truth of the REVELATION of his will to mankind.

AS no other book comes near to the SCRIPTURE, in point of antiquity, it is a disadvantage to us that we do not precisely know, further than we can collect from the sacred BOOKS, the customs, the manners, the sentiments, and common notions, that prevailed amongst men, at the date of the several transactions related; and are there-therefore at a loss to conceive, and distinctly to account for, the reason and meaning of several phrases, directions, and observances, whilst the ancients, to whom those things were said or delivered, well knew what they meant, and for what end they were recorded. But, though we do not know exactly why the thing was so phrased, or cannot tell, precisely, the immediate origin of the particular institution, yet by comparing of texts, we can see evidently the general sense of the phrase, and collect the end of the INSTITUTION, so far as the knowledge of the one or the other is necessary to the great design of God; and therefore ought rather, with thankfulness, to acknowledge the goodness of God, who through the midst of so many difficulties, has preserved to us all necessary knowledge, than repine at the loss of that which would tend chiefly to gratify curiosity.

THE highest act of religious service in the Jewish church, and amongst all mankind, was SACRIFICE, which, tho' in observance as early as Adam, was nevertheless re-established by Moses, with many particular positive injunctions, and many negative precepts; correcting abuses that had crept into that INSTITUTION, from the false notions of men.

IT was common to all sorts of SACRIFICE, that the BLOOD of the animal was spilt, and deemed of very high efficacy; and the whole body, or some part of it, that which was the most inflameable, the fat, and the inwards, was burnt with fire on the altar.

THIS BLOOD is directed, carefully and very early, to be abstained from; it is said to be the life of the animal; it is represented as what by the touch polluteth, and at the same time it is represented the most sovereign Purifier: by it the altar, the ark, the Sanctum sanctorum, the tabernacle, the priest, were sanctified, were cleansed, were hallowed.

THE BURNT-OFFERING is properly term'd Ascension, from the parts of it ascending in smoke by fire; the BLOOD is said to atone, and the SMOKE to be of a sweet savour, or a savour of rest to the Lord.

THE party who offered was to lay his hands upon the head of the Victim sacrificed for sin, when it was to be killed.

AND the very intent of the SIN-OFFERING was to atone for the sin a man came to the knowledge of, and confessed.

THE Deity, considered as the punisher of sin, and as in a state of anger and wrath against the guilty, is always represented under the image of Fire, a consuming, devouring Fire.

IF God, then, to commemorate his declaration of mercy and pardon to mankind, and to preserve and encourage their hopes, through the intercession of a Saviour, who was to be slain and bruised for their sins, was pleased to direct that an innocent animal, to represent the great Intercessor, should be slain, and that for the sins of him who brought him to the altar; That his Blood should be shed, and sprinkled upon the altar, and poured out at the foot thereof; that the carcass, or at least the fat the covering of the inwards, the most inflammable part of it, should be committed to the sacred fire, the emblem of the wrath of the Deity against it; and, being consumed, thereby should ascend towards the heavens in smoke, which smoke is represented as of a sweet favour, or favour of rest to Jehovah; and if man was told that this commemoration of the promised salvation was to atone for sin, and procure favour, how could there be any doubt in his mind that the Victim was only typical; that the virtue was really in the thing typified; that the Blood that sanctified every thing, and atoned for sin, was not the blood of the Victim; and that the Smoke, ascending from the sacrifice consumed by fire, was emblematical only of something else that was to ascend, from the typified Victim, to propitiate, and reconcile God to the sinner.

IT cannot, with reason, be doubted that the merciful God, who instituted SACRIFICE for the comfort and instruction of mankind, communicated to him the end and meaning of the several appointments; and, being once discovered, the EMBLEMS are in themselves so expressive, and the taking them in the literal sense so absurd, that it is no small proof of the corruption of human nature, and the strength of giddy IMAGINATION, that they ever came to be mistaken, or misapplied.

IN SACRIFICE, which was daily to be repeated as the highest act of devotion, man had the strongest Memorandum of his FALL; of the forfeiture thereby; of that life for which the BLOOD, the LIFE, of the VICTIM was to be shed; of the anger of God which must have consumed him, if what was represented by the BURNT-OFFERING had not interposed; and of the excellency of the SACRIFICE typified, by whose oblation the Deity was placated and reconciled. Reflections on this SYMBOLICAL act, and what clearly was intended by it, must put the mind in the most proper disposition for acknowledging, praying, and praising.

AND, therefore, besides the daily, the weekly, the monthly, the yearly, sacrifices, at stated times, it pleased the Deity to direct the iteration of the same SYMBOLICAL act, whenever man, moved by reverence to the Deity, was desirous to approach the place he chose for his service, in order to pray, to praise, or to rejoice, in his mercy, or favour. His peace offerings were to be offered with gladness; and, after the BLOOD was shed, and the FAT burnt upon the altar, the party who made the offering was to feast on the remainder with joy, in confidence of the favour of the Deity.

NAY, the perpetual obligation to abstain from BLOOD, and the FAT of animals slain, even for private use, was a constant Memo-randum, to such as could not attend the publick service, of their forfeiture, and of their restoration.

AND the necessary oblation of the FIRST-FRUITS, and of samples of what the earth yields for our support, in the regular meat and drink offerings, were so many memorials of what was to be with, or in, the great SACRIFICE, that it is surprizing the meaning should have been so much mistaken as, in time, it came to be.

THAT the same INSTITUTION, not dependant on the publication of the LAW by Moses, reached all nations, is evident from the antient, and universal, practice of all nations, with whom SACRIFICATURE was the highest act of devotion, thought sufficient to expiate sin, and to procure favour, and even fellowship with God.

THE antients of all nations shed BLOOD, and believed the vertue of it to be wonderful, witness their TAUROBOLIA, and their CRIOBOLIA, burned the FAT, and sometimes the whole VICTIM on altars with fire; and believed the smell grateful to the Deity; they offered FIRST-FRUITS; they poured out LIBATIONS; they burned samples of the grain the earth afforded them; the SALT of the COVENANT was not wanting; they vowed SACRIFICE, and returned thanks by SACRIFICE; and in their PEACE-OFFERINGS they feasted before their God on part of the victim, and rejoiced in his favour, and protection.

THIS true, the greatest part of them, suffering their IMAGINATIONS to mislead them, forgot the exprefs prohibition not to eat BLOOD, but still they retained the highest opinion of its efficacy. If they ate the BLOOD of sacrifice, it was to render them more perfect, and more acceptable; and if, instead of sprinkling the altar, they besmeared their own bodies with BLOOD, they gave thereby the stronger evidence of the merit and vertue, they imagined was, in the blood they made that use of.

BESIDES the VICTIM, another main ingredient in SACRIFICATURE was the PRIEST, the Person directed by God to approach his altar, and to make the oblation, and atonement in the name of Jehovah, for the party offering.

THE PRIESTHOOD, originally, resided with the first-born, with whom also, amongst the antient heathens, resided the ROYALTY.

IN Israel God exchanged, formally, the first-born for the Levites, and took the Levites, in their room, for the service of the tabernacle.

OF the house of Levi Aaron, the first-born, was to be High-Priest, his sons were to serve under him in SACRIFICATURE, and the bulk of the Levites were for inferior service only.

THIS High-Priest was to be perfect; he was to be consecrated with BLOOD, and anointed with OIL; he was to be pure from all spot; he was, whilst officiating, to be clothed with holy garments, all of linnen; he had precious, and very particular, robes and ornaments appointed for him. In the Breast-plate of Judgment he was to carry URIM and THUMMIM, LIGHT and PERFECTION, by which God gave responses; on his heart, and on his shoulders, were the names of all the tribes of the people, engraved on a plate of pure gold, to be constantly, whilst officiating, worn; on his forehead was the inscription HOLY, or HOLINESS, to Jehovah. The Plate, with this inscription, was said to be upon his forehead, that he might bear the iniquities of the holy things, which the Children of Israel should hallow, in all their gifts, and that they might be accepted. This Priest was to sprinkle the BLOOD; was to offer the BURNT-OFFERING; was to make atonement for sin, and reconcile; was to enter, with BLOOD, once a year within the VAIL, into the SANCTUM SANCTORUM, the EMBLEM of the residence of the invisible God; was to sprinkle BLOOD upon the MERCY-SEAT; and was, when he came out, solemnly to bless the people.

NOTHING can be more absurd than to suppose that Aaron was HOLINESS to Jehovah; that he was clean, and innocent; that he had in him light, and perfection; that he supported the whole people of Israel; that he could effectually atone for, and intercede with God, for the people; or that he could enter into the real presence of Jehovah,

Jehovah, and from thence bring a blessing to the people; and, consequently, nothing is plainer than that, in all these particulars, Aaron was no more than a Representative.

IF Aaron was to represent a Person pure, and innocent, full of light, and perfection, the holy one of Jehovah, who was to support, and have for ever on his heart, the people of God; who was to offer blood, effectual, for cleansing them from their sins; was thereby to atone, and make continual intercession for them; was to enter into the immediate presence of God, to propitiate for the people, and from thence to bless them; how could he do this otherways than by washing his body with WATER, as the EMBLEM of purity; by putting on white linnen GARMENTS, as the EMBLEM of INNOCENCE; by carrying URIM and THUMMIM, i. e. Light and Perfection, something by which the Deity manifested itself, about with him; by having the inscription of the holy one of Jehovah fastned to his forehead; by having the names of the tribes of Israel on his heart, and on his shoulders; by sprinkling the BLOOD for atonement; and offering the BURNT-SACRIFICE, that yielded a favour of rest; and by entering in solemnity into the HOLY OF HOLIES, the EMBLEM of the residence of the invisible God, there again to sprinkle BLOOD, and from thence, formally, to bless the people.

IN the merciful act of the Son of God for the salvation of mankind there are two parts, the PASSIVE, if one may so speak, and the ACTIVE; the VICTIM bleeding and burnt represents the PASSIVE part; but then the great SACRIFICE was not compelled to suffer by the act of any one; the sinner did not offer it; the SACRIFICE voluntarily offered itself, by doing so atoned, and continues ACTIVE in making intercession perpetually*.

THE VICTIM bleeding, then, points out this PASSIVE part of the satisfaction; but the ACTIVE part, that which claims, so necessarily, the acknowledgment, and adoration, of mankind to that beneficent, blessed, Being, that offered the atonement, and makes intercession; would not have been pointed out in this emblematical act, unless something, or person, to represent him, acting in that capacity, had been fixed upon; something adorned with the highest SYMBOLS of purity, sanctity, and perfection, offering and interceding for mankind; and who can fail to see these characters in the High-Priest?

AND

* N. B. Amongst the heathen, when a VICTIM seemed reluctant, that was deemed a bad OMEN.

AND therefore, as has been observed in the case of the VICTIM, no one, who believes the INSTITUTION divine, can doubt that the end and meaning of each particular was explained, when the observance was first appointed.

AND whoever admits this, must also see that the original REVELATION was very clear, circumstantiated, and distinct; and that the MEMORIALS instituted for preserving the knowledge, then revealed, and maintaining the impression of it on the spirits of men, were very expressive and significative, and with great accuracy adjusted to the ways of thinking of those who recorded every thing, intended to be known, by EMBLEMS, and SYMBOLICAL representations, however some of the particulars may not be now clear to us who know not the proper meaning of some of their SYMBOLS.

THE assumption of the Levites in place of the first-born is, visibly, no older than Moses; but it seems very clear the first-born were, before that institution, in some sense, what Aaron wore on the plate of the mitre, HOLY, or HOLINESS to Jehovah; and were all, as representatives of the great INTERCESSOR, entitled to shed BLOOD, and exercise the Priestly office, till the change was made, for very wise, and just, reasons.

No more is recorded of the first promise than that The seed of the woman should bruise the head of the serpent: So that it does not appear, from this text, to have been originally declared that the SAVIOUR was to proceed from a VIRGIN.

AND, if that had been declared, it would have been difficult to have found out any Representation fit to express, and keep up the memory of, it.

BESIDES, that the expectation of being the mother of that Saviour might have, with believing women, prevented marriage, as the same hopes promoted it among the Israelites, who looked for that seed, in the ordinary way; nay prompted some women to unlawful actions with men of the Line, who they supposed had the promise of the Seed, as Lot's Daughters; Tamar, the Midianitish woman; Bathsheba, &c.

BUT we find the expectation of the promised Seed was confined to the first-born, that which opened the womb.

Primogeniture was reckoned after the mother; the first-born of a second wife was entitled to the rights attending it, in prejudice of the the second son of a first wife tho' born, in point of time, ever so long before him. v. 1 Chron. 5. 1, 2.

AND the right of Primogeniture was confined to the male opening the womb; so that, if a daughter came first, the right ceased in the subsequent sons.

IT must have been for some very important end that God marked out this circumstance of the first-born, the first that opened the womb, with so extraordinary characters, that as the first-born amongst men was to be holy to the Lord, and to officiate as Priest, or Intercessor, the first-born among beasts were also to be holy to the Lord, to be offered to him, if clean; if unclean, to be ransomed.

WHO, then, can doubt that the prerogative of PRIESTHOOD was annexed to the first-born, to keep in mind, and to point forth, that the great INTERCESSOR was to be a first-born; and that the first-born, in every family, were chosen for the PRIESTHOOD, as so many Types, or symbolical representations of him.

AT the first peopling, and, afterwards, at the re-peopling of the earth, when men began to spread, and separate into new settlements, it was necessary to keep up the service of God, and the knowledge of his REVELATION, by the established SYMBOLS; to have a Priest who could shed BLOOD, and make atonement, in every family. And it seems certain every family had its Priest (the first-born) its holy things, and all the appurtenances of religious service.

WHEN ambition joined many families into common-wealths, or kingdoms, and human prudence would make laws, this right of PRIESTHOOD could not fail to come under some regulations, different from the original INSTITUTION; tho', for the first ages of the world, it remained still in the highest esteem.

WHEN men, from their vain *imagination*s, began to mistake, or misinterpret, the original REVELATION, and to devise new notions, and new services, for themselves, it became necessary to republish REVELATION, with all the marks of omnipotent power; and, to prevent mistakes for the future, it was fit to erect the Jewish state, as above hinted, and to give them the keeping of the LAW, and the observation of all the rites, and ceremonies.

BUT as this LAW could not possibly have been so accurately observed whilst the PRIESTHOOD was executed, at large, by the first-born in every family, it pleased God to alter the original institution, and to make choice of one particular tribe for his service; and, out of that tribe, of the first-born and his descendants for ever to serve at the altar, and to represent the High First-born, the great Intercessor, in all the symbolical service that supported the knowledge, the faith, the hope, of those that feared God.

AND, in the very order for changing the INSTITUTION, the knowledge of the original institution is preserved; the Levites are said to be taken in place of the first-born; and the regard for the first-born is still preserved, as holy to the Lord, by making it necessary to redeem them by an oblation; not to speak of the prerogatives still accruing to them by the Jewish civil constitution.

THOUGH the Jewish law has a particular, additional, reason for the sanctity of the first-born, to commemorate the delivery of their first-born from the common calamity of the first-born in Egypt; yet, by the proceeding of God towards the Egyptian first born, it is evident the notion of their importance was strong, before that event.

IN the original message which Moses was to deliver from JEHOVAH to Pharaoh, Israel is called his first-born: and, if Pharaoh did not dismiss him, JEHOVAH was to slay Pharaoh's first-born; and the same Israel is, afterwards, called a nation of PRIESTS.

WHEN Pharaoh, hardened by his vain heart, and doubtless prompted by the Priests of those gods whom he served, refused to let the first-born, the Priests of JEHOVAH go, the threat was literally executed; all his first-born were slain, and the first-born of Israel were delivered.

IF Egypt had any hopes from their first-born, the threat was severe, and the execution terrible; and we see it prevailed, above all the other judgments, for the deliverance of Israel.

AND that Egypt had hopes from their first-born is very likely, from what appears to have been the practice, and opinion, of their neighbours, who burned to Moloch, and sacrificed, on great exigencies, their first-born, in hopes of placating the offended Deity: Whence could a practice so, seemingly, monstrous come, but from the first promise misunderstood?

Esau's selling his birthright, the infamous character that brought him, the, seemingly, extraordinary steps his mother took (when 'tis not observed that she was directed by the Oracle) and the loss of the blessing consequent upon it, sufficiently shew the high esteem of Primogeniture, before the days of Pharaoh. And, indeed, the parting so cheap with a privilege so high, as representing the Inter-
cessor

cessor between God and Man, gives a very vile idea of Esau, if one can help calling him a Freethinker, which he could hardly be, considering his concern for the blessing.

THAT Priesthood and Primogeniture went, antiently, together, we gather from prophane history,

The Lacedæmonian Kings were both Priests and Kings, because it could not be decided which was first-born; and almost all the antient kings sacrificed.

WHATEVER corruptions imagination introduced in religion, the Priesthood was ever held in great honour; the original institution was strangely depraved in the Roman state, but still the Priesthood continued to enjoy, at least, it's antient titles; the term of Rex sacrorum, Rex sacrificulus, went down through the Roman commonwealth, where the title of Rex was abominated, And the Roman Emperors, notwithstanding their ignorance, and vanity of aspiring after DEIFICATION for themselves, yet affected the title of Pontifex Maximus, as an honour, and a security to their government.

THE religious regard for SACRIFICATURE, and the reverence for the PRIESTHOOD must have been stamped deep upon the minds of men, by a very extraordinary authority; else they could not have endured for so many generations, and amongst nations so little conversant with each other.

THO' Rome, and the Greek commonwealths, established on levelling principles, seem to have forgot that any prerogative at all was due to Primogeniture, yet it was not so with more northern nations, whose notions were less corrupted with imaginations. The Goths, the Franks, and the other People called Barbarians, who overthrew the Roman Empire, preserved continually a regard for it, and have left large prerogatives attending upon it over all Europe.

AS the original REVELATION, for the preservation whereof those rites, ceremonies, and observances, were instituted, discovered to man, in the ordinance of SACRIFICATURE, the chief foundation of his faith, and hope; so, it is evident from other rites, observances, and symbols or emblems, constantly observed, and preserved, that from the beginning man was taught his duty, what he was to do with respect to, and what he was to believe concerning, the Deity.

OF this the universal practice of ABLUTION, or washing with water, is an instance which, from the earliest times, has taken place over the whole known world.

THE Israelites, before they received the LAW, were to wash themselves, when they were to approach the presence of God: all Nations had their LUSTRATIONS, by sprinkling of water. The High-Priest, and his sons, were to wash their flesh, as often as they went about any part of the sacred work; and the children of Israel, upon any uncleanness, were to wash with water, in many cases, with particular ceremonies.

TOUCHING any filth, or nastiness, a dead carcass of any kind, the fore or issue of man, or woman, were said to pollute, were sufficient to debar the party from appearing before the Lord, who is described as abominating every thing that is unclean; and ABLUTION, with certain other observances, were sufficient to put an end to that uncleanness, and to admit to the service of God.

No man, in his senses, can think that the external uncleanness of any person, in the literal sense, or the imputed uncleanness, as one may say, by the touch of an unclean thing, could be offensive to God; much less that washing with water, considered as an external act only, could remove any real, internal uncleanness; and that, therefore, it is impossible to doubt that both the one, and the other signified something more than is in the letter expressed.

THO', by the Light of Nature, we can discover that this creation had an author eternal, infinitely perfect, and particularly infinitely just, good, wise, and intelligent; yet we, who can frame to ourselves no adequate idea of our own souls, and who know nothing about them, but the little we collect from what we feel transacting in ourselves, ought not to be surprized, that, without REVELATION, we can frame to ourselves no just notion of the invisible God; but ought rather to be amazed at the impudence of those, who pretend to decide what God is, or is not, and what he can, or cannot do, from the notions they have framed to themselves of his attributes, nature, and perfection.

THE first hint we have in the sacred Book that can help us to any notion of the Deity is, that man was framed in his LIKENESS, and according to his image; from whence we may not only collect the intelligence of the Deity, which Nature sufficiently discovers, but also inclinatio<sup>n</sup>s, inclinations, or dispositions, in the divine mind, to which those in the mind of man, in the state of perfection, were something similar.

DISLIKING, hatred, anger; liking, pleasure in the actings of creatures, love, jealousy, inclination restrained, compassion and concern, are affections which the Wise men of this world hold the Deity incapable of, they look so like passions that cannot touch a Being infinitely perfect, and essentially happy; and in this reasoning they agree with Epicurus, who rejected all providence, touching the things of this world, because he looked upon the care it presupposed to be troublesome to the Deity.

BUT REVELATION differs from these Wise men; it describes the Deity as possessed of affections, and inclinations, similar to those that a perfect man may feel in himself, and something still higher and peculiar to God: Detestation, hatred and abhorrence, of sin; anger, and wrath against the sinner, as such; Compassion towards the miserable, and concern; Desire, tho' sometimes without success, to save, and to reform; Love to those that do well, satisfaction in their well-doing; pleasure in the acknowledgments, and praises, of those benefitted, and attention to their requests; as well as jealousy, and indignation, at the setting up any Rival for acknowledgment and praise.

Now if any man will give himself leave to consider to what purpose God displayed so much wisdom, power, and goodness, in the formation, and preservation, of this whole material system, of man, and of all other living creatures; to what purpose man had discerning and reason given him; to what purpose he had the ideas, and the law of right, and wrong, imprinted on his mind; and to what purpose he had in his heart planted a disposition to admire, to adore, to reverence, to acknowledge, to thank, and to praise; he cannot long be in suspense between REVELATION and IMAGINATION, but must assent to the truth of what the Deity has revealed?

DID God exert infinite power, wisdom, and goodness, in the creation of this world; did he give man eyes, and understanding, to see that wisdom, power, and goodness, and a heart disposed to admire, adore, and praise; and will it nevertheless be said that this admiration, adoration, and praise is indifferent to him? Must it not, necessarily, be concluded that these things are well pleasing to the Deity, and that the man who yields them is acceptable to him, stands in his favour, and good-will, and may be considered as beloved of him? And must it not, with equal certainty, be concluded that the man who refuses to answer the end of his creation, who neglects to pay God that adoration, praise, and service, that is due; who fixes his heart on the creature, in place of the Creator; and who gratifies those lusts, and pursuits, he has set up in the room of God, at the expence of breaking the laws of right and wrong, implanted in his breast, is disagreeable to God, the Object of his anger, and indignation; and that his sinful, treasonable actions are offensive to that Being that delights in right, in harmony, and in order?

Philosophers may puzzle themselves, and others, with reasoning, from abstract notions which they have framed to themselves, as they think fit; they possibly may not see how a Being infinitely, and essentially, perfect and happy, can admit of accession to, or diminution from, that happiness; but their not being able perfectly to comprehend how this is so, will be no good reason to disbelieve what the Deity declares concerning himself; or to persuade that God is not pleased with the doing of his will, and displeased at doing the contrary.

AND, if we can bring our selves up to believe that the infinitely perfect SPIRIT is pleased, and affected, with the rectitude of the spirits of men, with the sentiments therein framed, and with the joy and gratitude that flows thence, in expressions of praise, acknowledgment, and adoration, we shall have small ground to doubt (what the Deity formally reveals) that his SPIRIT acts reciprocally on men, that it enlightens, enlivens, and encourages them towards their duty; and felicity.

NOR is the cessation of miracles, for some centuries; or the observation that nature follows, in all things falling under our cognifance, a settled, fixed, mechanical, course, pursuant to certain established rules, any ground to doubt of the communication between the infinite SPIRIT, and the spirits of men, which, the scripture says, is and ever has been open. The godly disposition, the religious actions, of the soul operate, as one may say, mechanically upon the Deity, producing satisfaction and complacency; and that, again, acts reciprocally upon the soul, by that sort of mechanism, or manner of operation, by which spirit operates on spirit. Were the case not so, God would not have been delighted with prayers, and praises, he would not have commanded and encouraged them; and the duty of man, in the religious acts of the heart, instead of being a blessing and enjoyment, would be a burthen to him.

WE are so well acquainted with the perturbations, the transports, the ruffles, that pleasures and passions produce in ourselves, that we are unwilling to allow any such affections in the Deity: But why must affections and inclinations produce such disturbances in the Deity as they do in us? May not God detest sin, dislike the sinner, and even destroy him, without being ruffled, or suffering his essential happiness to be impaired? May he not have affections and inclinations like to ours, without those inconveniences that, in our weak frame, attend them?

GOD cannot be desirous, says a Reasoner, that any thing should happen, and yet that thing not happen; because, if he were truly desirous, his OMNIPOTENCE would infallibly effect it. But, then, the Reasoner does not consider that this desire is only spoken of the disposition, the inclination, of the Deity, and not of any formal act of the will. The inclination, the disposition, may lie strongly one way, and yet there may be insuperable obstacles that hinder to will what the mind inclines to.

A Prince may have the strongest inclination to pardon an offender convicted, suppose his favourite son, guilty of a crime of the highest nature, and most dangerous example, and yet reasons of justice and polity may determine his will not to follow that inclination. In the same way, why may not the Deity be desirous, and even solicitous, that a thing may happen, which, because of higher considerations, he cannot interpose in, that is, cannot formally and absolutely will should happen?

THESE reflections, and many more of the same kind, that must occur on reading the Scriptures, leave it very plain that the language of that book, which describes the Deity's actings, affections, and inclinations, in terms borrowed from the usage, the sentiments and resolutions of men, is not so figurative as it is generally supposed to be; and that we ought to understand it something more literally than Reasoners are willing to allow.

IN every page of the sacred Book God inculcates his aversion to, and abhorrence of sin, and his detestation of sinners.

TO give men some notion of this aversion, and dislike, he borrows that idea of loathing and abhorrence, that men feel on the sight, or touch, of any nasty, unclean, loathsome, object.

GOD represents himself holy, pure, undefiled, separated from sinners, of purer eyes than that he can behold iniquity.

HE represents sin as uncleanness, pollution, loathsomeness, in the highest degree; and similitudes are taken from many vile, impure, abominable things to describe it.

AND he represents the sinner, as polluted by sin, unclean, and therefore abhorred, and incapable to approach his PURITY, in that unclean state.

BUT, then, as this picture, by itself, would be fit only to distract, and drive the sinner to despair; he, at the same time, represents a possibility of wiping away this pollution, and washing the sinner clean, by means very natural, and very easy to be come at.

TO the end, therefore, that this image should be the more strongly impressed on men's minds, and the picture come the more frequently before their eyes, it pleased God, at the first REVELATION of his will, and INSTITUTION of religious ceremonies and service, to direct a total abstinence from the touch of every thing that was, either in itself, or in the apprehension of mankind, unclean, foul, or loathsome.

IT pleased God, also, to command the abstaining from several things that do not seem, in their own nature, to be unclean or loathsome; and to declare that, by the very contact of such things, men became impure, were unclean, and abominable in the eyes of God, and therefore could not be admitted into his holy Presence, or to any religious act.

BUT this impurity was to be purged away by Ablution, or aspersion, according to the prescription in the several cases, when the party was washed in water, and purified, he might present himself before God; but if, knowing his uncleanness, he mixed in the service of God without being purified, the offence was capital, he was to be cut off from his people.

THIS constitution must, necessarily, produce the greatest nicety, and care to preserve cleanliness, in those who put any value on the favour and service of God.

AND, if they were not so stupid as to look only to the Letter, the external act, it must for ever keep in their view the purity and holiness of God; the ugliness and deformity of sin, the abhorrence God had of it, and of the sinner, the necessity of avoiding it, if one would have any communication with the Deity; and the mercy and goodness of God in providing a purification to cleanse from it, such as could as easily be come at as common water, and was as effectual to remove the filth of sin, as water was for common nastiness.

THE whole of this INSTITUTION, which was as antient and universal as sacrifice, is obviously symbolical and instructive; and, if the real meaning of it was lost, if men began to think there was any real impurity in the touch of a dead carcase, or any real vertue to purge sin in water, it must be evidence of their utter degeneracy, blindness and corruption.

PERHAPS, things not really impure were to be avoided as such, to create the greater circumspection, and to bring the instruction oftner in view.

IT is not reasonable to think that God should enjoin, or prohibit, in matters of religion, any thing in itself absolutely indifferent, under severe penalties, purely to be a test of obedience.

BUT it is reasonable to think that a thing in itself indifferent may be commanded, to keep up the memory of any fact, or precept, to impart knowledge, and preserve instruction.

ABSTAINING from the altar after any external pollution could not possibly have been enjoined, under the pain of death, but for the important lesson it was intended to teach of the holiness of God, and the purity of heart, necessary to those that would approach him.

EATING the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, would not have been prohibited, but to warn our first parents against the ambitious desire of knowing more than came to their share, and the presumptuous conceit of relying on their own knowledge, and following their own *imagination*s which destroyed them, and continues to mislead, and undo, multitudes of their weak, vain, descendants.

THAT species of Infidels that glories in the title of FREE-THINKERS, who set up their own knowledge and understanding against the Revelation of God, split upon the same rock on which our first parents shipwrecked, notwithstanding the beacon that has been fixed on it from the creation of the world.

CIRCUMCISION may have served for a mark of distinction to the Israelites, because it was not practised by their neighbours in Canaan, though it was by the other descendants of Abraham and Isaac, Ishmael and Esau: But it had undoubtedly a higher meaning, and probably an origin earlier than the days of Abraham.

THAT it had a higher meaning is certain from the frequent declarations.

clarations that a circumcised heart, a heart cut off and separated from all unruly lusts, and affections, is what God delights in.

AND that it had an earlier origin, seems to be very evident, from the early observance of that institution, amongst many nations who cannot be believed to have received it from Abraham, or his descendants.

MEN may dream, but it is impossible to persuade one that has his eyes open, and who reflects on the bitter animosities that must have been between the Egyptians and the Israelites, the high contempt the former must have entertained of the latter, the vanity and tenaciousness of the Priests of Egypt, with respect to the mysteries of their religion, and the impiety and abomination which the religious service of the Israelites appeared to them to be stuffed with, that the Egyptian Priests, (and they, principally, were in the earliest times circumcised) would have submitted to follow the despised, detested, Israelites in a bloody practice of this kind, and would have transmitted it, as sacred, to their descendants.

AND, indeed, if it had been meant only for a sign of distinction for Israel, it ought not to have descended to Ishmael, and Esau, but ought to have been confined to the twelve tribes.

IT may, reasonably, therefore be looked on as one of the original Institutions appointed just after the FALL, which, though retained here and there, particularly in Egypt, had nevertheless been left off in Abraham's country, where idolatry began to prevail; and was therefore renewed to Abraham, when he was selected, from his depraved country, to be the father of a people to whom the original Revelation should be republished, and who were to become the keepers of the Oracles of God.

TAKING this, then, to be the case, and recollecting that Eve proved the tempter to Adam; that love to her, who had forfeited by eating, prevailed with him to follow her fate; that inclination to women is the most fierce, the most ungovernable of the desires and lusts of men; and that it was fit to establish some very sensible memorial of the offence at the Fall, that should carry instruction along with it, to curb and bridle noxious desires; who can help concluding, that Circumcision was appointed to fix a permanent MARK on that part of the body, the gratification of the lust whereof, had so great a share in the seduction of mankind; and thereby to admonish against all lusts and carnal gratifications, and to advise and instruct men men to cut off all sensual desires, and to wean themselves from them?

LYING carnally with woman, even with a man's own wife, than which nothing is more natural, or more innocent, is, in the eye of the LAW, a pollution, and required Ablution, before the party could be admitted to the Presence of God. Why? to prevent the setting too high a value on it, to check the too fond desire, and pursuit, of it; and to shew that such desires, encouraged, are inconsistent with that purity of heart that is required in the service of God, who claims possession of the whole heart, and will not admit of rivals. And, if this is the undeniable meaning of that prohibition, it is easy to see the sense of the symbolical act of cutting off, and flinging away, the FORESKIN of the flesh, than which nothing can be a more proper Emblem of forward, fierce, fleshly, appetites, and sensual delights.

Though Circumcision might have been given to Israel, as a MARK to distinguish them from the other adjacent nations surrounding Canaan, and was, by them, to be considered as a Mark of the COVENANT between them and God; yet that does not say that the original intention, and emblematical use of it, was to be dropt, or lost; on the contrary, it is evident, from the frequent allusions plainly made to the symbolical sense of it by the inspired writers, that it was still kept in view, and principally to be observed, by Israel.

AND, in like manner, many of the Institutions, which were in practice antiently, seem to be applied to particular actions or events which were near the time of the renewal of those Institutions in the Jewish LAW. But it does not follow from these applications that the original Institutions, or the sense and meaning of them, were to be dropt or lost. In an earthly affair, each Israelite, when he enter'd upon lands in Canaan, was to bring a basket of fruit, and make a CONFESSION why he performed that action; which proves that those symbolical acts had a formal meaning; and suggests that there may have been original, formal, Confessions, acknowledgments, and prayers, attending the acts of Religion or Devotion; though, not being recorded, otherwise than in general, that once all the Earth had one Confession, the particular Forms have not descended to us, with sufficient Evidence.

NOTHING is more unjust than the suggestion that the observation of the SABBATH, or seventh Day, was to take place only amongst the Israelites.

IF the Scriptures are to be the rule, the Sabbath had its origin immediately upon the Creation, and before the FALL. God is said to have RESTED on the seventh day from his work, and to have hallowed the sabbath day, on which it was criminal, nay capital, to do any work.

IF the antient, profane, writers are to be searched, the Sabbath will be found so antient, that it could not possibly have been derived from the Jewish Law. For not to take notice of the frequent mention to be met with of Sabbaths, and days of rest, which might have been borrowed from Jewish customs, it is certain that the most antient Greeks, and the more antient Egyptians, divided the time by HEBDOMADES, a circle or revolution of seven days, to each of which they gave the name of some planet, except the seventh, which they dedicated to the sovereign of all the heavenly luminaries, the SUN; and this CICLE being no proper, constituent, part of moon, month, or year, must necessarily have flowed from Institution: Nor could any thing be a more proper, permanent, MEMORIAL of the Creation than the appointing the observation of the seventh day; at the same time that, debarring man from work, it sequestered him to the contemplation of the Creation, and its Creator, so Formation and its Former, and allowed his soul time to entertain itself with objects, peculiarly fitted for it.

IF every seventh day man was to be stopped in his career, in pursuit of low, earthly, comforts, by a holy rest, which it was capital to profane by labour; if he was to observe this rest, week after week, in memory of God's having rested the seventh day, after having finished the creation in six; no mean could be devised more likely to keep up the memory of the creation, and to banish the extravagant Imagination that the world was eternal; and no Institution could lead more necessarily, and directly, to employ man, at least one seventh part of his time, in those speculations that tend to keep up communication between the soul and the Deity, and to preserve the memory and knowledge of the Revelation of God to man; nor could man have been guilty of a more fatal piece of perverseness than to discontinue, and leave off, the observance which, in all appearance, drew along with it the loss of the true sense and meaning of all the other Institutions. It is one of the reproaches the most insisted on

against the backsliding Israelites, that they neglected the sabbaths of the Lord.

IN the whole of the primitive, religious, service, there is not any circumstance casual, every particular, every gesture, is instructive.

IN the PRESENCE of God man fell upon his face to the ground; and, by that act, humbly confessed his ORIGINAL: hence bowing to the ground is the formal word for worshipping, which it was high treason to practice toward any idol. And when, from that posture, man raised himself to praise, and to bless God, he raised himself no farther than the knee, still so far retaining the posture of humility; and from this posture the word to signify Blessing is taken; as bowing to the ground is used to signify worshipping, kneeling is used to signify  blessing.

IF the original Revelation was compleat, man must have been told that the Deity was to descend to this earth, to dwell there amongst men, and to instruct by precept and example.

IF this was originally revealed, it must have been recorded, by appointing some symbolical observance, some emblematical representation.

IF, in the Republication of the Law to the Israelites, the appointment the most remarkable was to erect, first, a tabernacle, and then a temple, for the reception of the Presence of the Deity, who made repeated declarations that he was to dwell in the midst of the children of Israel, that he was to reside in the tabernacle, first, and then in the house that was to be built for him, and was more particularly to reside between the CHERUBIMS.

ACCORDINGLY, the tabernacle first, and then the temple, having been built, a Cloud, the Glory of the Lord, or the symbol of his presence filled these mansions, and the Deity from thence gave responses, and directions, and pronounced Judgments.

IN the sacred writings there are many formal intimations that this Institution, and dispensation, amongst the Jews, was typical, and predictive that the real GLORY of the Lord was to come to the temple; that the temple, the symbol of his mansion, was to be destroyed; and that the figurative, the emblematical, service, and Institution, was to cease, and to give way to the real Presence, and spiritual instruction of the Deity.

AND, indeed, by the cessation of all that service, and by the destruction of the temple, immediately after the Lord who was expected came to it, we evidently see the Institution could have been to no other end but to create, and keep up, that expectation.

BUT if we look a little farther back, we shall see the belief of God's residence among men, and the practice of building tabernacles, and houses or temples, for that residence, much earlier than the republication of the Law from Sinai.

MOST of the antient nations had temples, dedicated, for the supposed residence of their gods. The Philistines had a house for Dagon, before the Israelites had any for JEHOVAH; and many cities in Canaan are named from the temples of the Deities worshipped by the inhabitants.

Jacob promised to make the stone, which he anointed at Luz, Bethel, the house of God, and he was as good as his word; for, some years after, he there built an altar, and sacrificed.

THE Israelites, upon their going out of Egypt, before the Mosaick tabernacle was built, had a tabernacle in which they believed the Presence of God to be, and in which the pot of Manna, &c. was laid up.

THE idolaters, who came up amongst the Israelites, are reproached with having carried in the wilderness the tabernacles of their gods, whilst the living God was so miraculously feeding, and protecting them.

THIS Practice, which could not possibly have come from the Law of Moses, but which the Law of Moses, as well as the usage of Jacob, and of the Israelites, shews to have been approved of by God, must necessarily have flowed from divine Institution, as early as the original Revelation; and was perfectly well calculated to keep in mind the original intimation, that God was to humble himself so far as to descend to dwell amongst men, and to create a constant expectation of that event.

AND, as we have already observed on other occasions, if this practice had not had some very authentick institution for its original, it is scarce possible it ever should have universally obtained; nothing being more contradictory to the common notions, which the light of nature could afford, than the belief that the immaterial, incomprehensible Being, should dwell in houses made by hands, and sojourn with such groveling creatures as man. The universal practice, then, in this instance, is strong evidence that it does not depend upon human invention. Imagination, indeed, would mislead from the in-tion of the Institution, and would graft many impertinencies on it, whenever the real design was mistaken; but there is hardly any example of an observance, so seemingly unnatural as this, if universal, that cannot be traced up to a divine original, at least to some divine intimation, or institution, that gave occasion to it.

As the Institution, we are now upon, was of a very high nature, and important to be observed, and relied on, it is extremely probable that the Deity, to devout men (for to such, we know from Scripture, God was pleased to reveal himself) thought fit to give particular proofs of his Presence in the house, tabernacle, or place appointed for his residence. He spoke to Moses from the tabernacle of the congregation, before the Mosaick tabernacle was erected: And if those temples, or tabernacles, were so honoured on particular occasions, we may cease to wonder why the Gentiles took up the belief of Oracular responses from their deities (which, again, is a conceit they hardly could have taken up without precedent.) Knowing that the true God revealed his will to his true servants, in those places which he authorised to be set aside as for his Presence, and believing their false Gods true, and themselves acceptable servants, they naturally would accept such communications; and their Imaginations might impose on them, or make their belief an easy prey to any impostor, any Priest of a false God, who should have courage and cunning enough to frame a lye.

WHEN we see an observance has, universally, prevailed amongst the heathens, which is afterwards approved of by the Law of Moses, we justly conclude it sprung from divine authority.

WHEN we see customs, obtaining among the early heathens, which are prohibited by the Law, we may safely conclude that those customs were not of divine Institution, but were derived either from some laudable, pious, practice of the believing Patriarchs, which had been abused, or from Imagination.

THUS we see the respect among the earliest Syrian, and Greek, heathens for BAITULIA, stones which were set up on end, anointed, and believed to be sacred, and in process of time transferred to their temples, and revered as statues of their Gods.

AND we cannot avoid seeing the practice of consecrating, as we say, a stone by Jacob, when, upon the manifestation of the Deity, he set it up, poured oil upon it, vowed a vow, and said it should be BETH-EL, the house of God.

BUT,

BUT, however that devout act, that solemn memorial of Jacob's vow, and of the merciful appearance to him, might have been acceptable to God; and, however such things might have been religiously, and acceptably, done by other pious men, before and after him, yet we see the practice is in the Law prohibited, perhaps, because of its being liable to abuse, and because of the corruptions it had already introduced.

WE see, also, that the Patriarchs shewed particular, sacred, respect to some sort of trees. The Oaks of Mamre were, in some degree, sacred to Abraham. It is not impossible they might have made some species of trees Memorials, to the end they might think on the thing such tree represented, so often as the tree came in their view. Abraham planted a Grove, or Tree, at Beersheba, and called there on the name of Jehovah, the everlasting God. Many of these emblematical trees, put together, might form groves; and we do know that groves were amongst the most antient places of Worship, amongst the Nations; and that particular sorts of trees were held sacred to certain Deities, amongst those that had forgot, or rather misapplied, the service of the true God.

THESE observances continued to be revered as late as Homer; Hector wishes for a Stone, or an Oak-Tree, from whence he might with safety speak to Achilles; and loqui a quercu is, in the language of the old Italians, to speak with safety.

AMONGST the things which were abused, and, by the renewal or Jewish institution, were prohibited, ordered to be discontinued, cut down, and destroyed, the Jews have taken in sacred Trees, or Groves: But, it appears, the word which they construe Groves signifies images of Venus, or &c. and it appears that they used sacred Trees, and Groves, to the last.

THERE is another instance, of the same kind, in the case of what we translate ORNAMENTS. The original notion of the word carries in it the idea of witnessing, testifying, &c. and some passages of the scriptures seem to point at a very surprizing regard shewed by the Deity to those ornaments. After the defection, in making the golden calf, God commands the people, by Moses, Exod. 33. 4, 5, 6. to put off their ornaments from them, that he might know what to do unto them. And the people put off their ornaments, and mourned. We cannot doubt, then, that the people looked upon those ornaments as defences against any sudden mischiefs, or unlucky casualties; and that that this opinion had some authority from the conduct of the Deity, in providence, and from the practice of godly men, if not even from divine institution; and to this early observance are owing all the Amulets, all the *Talisman*s, the annuli, amongst the antients, which they looked upon as averruncating of evil, and as so many defences and preservatives from harm.

THO' we know nothing of the Ornaments of the Israelites, yet, looking upon the antient *Talisman*s, the Abraxas, the Annuli, and other gems, that are still preserved, which are full of inscriptions, and hieroglyphical figures, of which we can make no certain sense, at this day; we may naturally conclude that the earliest ornaments which had the virtue, the later were only supposed to have, were formed somewhat in the same way; and that the hieroglyphical figures, with which they were charged, represented some sacred discoveries, or promises, worn on certain parts of the body, to be perpetual memorandums of the propositions expressed in those emblems.

AND, accordingly, when the Law was given, by Moses, in writing, in the room of that preserved, formerly, by Hieroglyphicks, we see injunctions that the people should wear the Law, or parts of it, as Signs upon their hands, and for Frontlets between their eyes, Deut. 6. 8. which the later Jews, understanding literally, wrote passages, as they conceived the most remarkable, of the Law on vellum, which they rolled up in Phylacteries, and wore on their arms, and foreheads, with a superstitious regard, in the days of Christ; and it is for the ostentatious, hypocritical, use of them, making broad their Phylacteries, the Pharisees are reproved, Matth. 23. 5. and not for their being at all used, as some suppose; which shews that the wearing those Signs, and Frontlets was literally, and not in a figurative sense only, enjoined.

IF we observe the Passages of the LAW of Moses, in which the wearing those Signs, and Frontlets, are recommended, we shall find them exceeding important; and that the intent of the recommendation is to keep, for ever, and attentively, in memory the particular transaction, or declaration, to which they relate, by way of evidence that such a transaction hapned, or such a declaration was made; and, in this light they agree with the sense of the word we translate Ornaments, which implies bearing evidence, testifying: and, if the meaning of this later INSTITUTION was to inculcate, by written Memorandums, the important passages of the LAW, or the Jewish economy, it is very natural to think that the end of those Hieroglyphical
Ornaments,

Ornaments, in use before the written Law, was of the same nature, to present frequently to men's view the most signal articles of the original Revelation.

MEN, who have not sufficiently enquired, may make it an objection to the goodness of God, with an intent to impeach the truth of the Christian Religion; that the world, on the supposition of the Christian scheme, was suffered to lie so long in darkness: that the Judaick religion was confined, and hidden, in mysteries; and that the Christian religion came too late, and attended with too slender evidence; but, after giving due attention to these hints, they must confess the original publication of the revealed will of God full, and perfect; that instructive lessons were conveyed in every Rite, Ceremony, Observance, and Institution; that the strongest Memorials were established of what was declared, was to be believed, and hoped for; that perpetual Memorandums were appointed for bringing into men's minds their duty, and strengthening their belief, and their hopes; and that this knowledge, those institutions, and these hopes, reached over the bulk of mankind, before the renewal of the Law to Israel. Tho' mankind so corrupted themselves, so cooled and slackened in their duty, and pursued so wantonly, and presumptuously, their own imaginations, as to have lost almost all the knowledge of the things revealed, and of the end and design of the Institutions; and to have preserved no more than some great lines of external observances, which serve at this day for evidence, only, that there was a very early REVELATION of the will of God to mankind, joined with hopes of mercy; but do not shew what the particulars were of that REVELATION, which can be gathered, only, from considering the sacred Institution, as it is delivered, compleatly, in the LAW, explained by the PROPHETS, and perfected by the GOSPEL.

BUT, after all, tho' in the Institutions, already referred to, one may see very distinctly, almost, all the articles of the Christian faith, and hope; yet, if the original REVELATION went no farther, it must be owned there are some great points wanting, something disclosed in the GOSPEL, relating to the Deity, that the declarations and institutions, hitherto mentioned, do not extend to, and that the light of Nature, by itself, could not discover.

THE Gospel informs, precisely, and formally, that tho' the God-head is essentially one, yet there are in the divine essence three Persons, equal in perfection, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. That the Son, to satisfy essential justice, took on him flesh, was united

united to the humanity, suffered for sinners, made atonement for them, raised the Man, to whom he was joined, from the dead, glorified him with himself, and is to make continual intercession for sinners; and that the Holy Spirit, upon the ascension of the Son of God, was sent to instruct, to comfort, and, as one may say, to inspire all who, believing in Jesus Christ, should endeavour to do their duty, to serve, and to glorify God.

THAT this is true every Christian believes, and whoever does so feels the expediency of being acquainted with it, as it exalts his sentiments of the wisdom, the justice, the mercy, the goodness, the love, of God; and lets him know how to place his acknowledgment, his service, his adoration, at the same time that it cautions him against those sins, and abuses, that can be washed away no other ways than by the blood of the Son of God.

AND, as this is true, and highly necessary to be known, it would not be of a piece with the rest of the tenor of the goodness, and condescension, of the Deity, if, in the original Revelation of Grace, this was not also intimated to mankind, however the perversity, and presumption of human imagination, and invention, may have confounded, and, thereby, in a great measure, have lost the Memorials instituted for preserving this REVELATION.

IT will be granted by every Freethinker, because it is the foundation of his own belief, or rather unbelief, that, consulting nature, Unity is essential to the Deity; and that nothing is less deducible from the Light of Nature than a Plurality of Deities, nay that a Plurality, in the common sense, is inconsistent with it, and therefore impossible.

IT is, at the same time, true in fact that all the antient nations entered readily into the belief of a Plurality of Deities, how contrary soever the opinion might be to the light of Nature; and continued in that faith till Christianity beat them out of it.

ONE would not infer from this that Polytheism was an article of the original Revelation, because we see the heathens grafted many mistaken imaginations upon what was originally revealed; but it seems to be a fair conclusion that something, concerning the Deity, not discoverable by the light of Nature, and seemingly dissonant to it, was originally revealed, from whence this false but universal opinion took it's birth: and if the doctrine of the Trinity was originally promulgated, and believed, it is easy to see how it might degenerate into POLYTHEISM, as the Christian TRINITY ran the hazard of doing.

IF this reflection is candidly weighed; if one considers that the first teacher of Polytheism could not possibly deduce his doctrine from reason, but must necessarily support it from authority; and if one then enquires what degree of authority would be sufficient to draw all mankind into the settled belief of this monstrous proposition, or indeed of any thing a-kin to it, from which this, by imagination or deduction, can be derived, he must needs conclude the authority must be, at least believed, divine, before reasonable creatures could give credit to it, and could be brought to speak of, and make their addresses to, Gods in the plural number.

IT is impossible to make this reflection without joining to it, what has been already observed, that the word ELOHIM, used in the Hebrew Scriptures to signify God, is plural; owned by all to be such, and particularly by the Jews, who have the idea of plurality in the highest contempt, and who make in their translations a very ridiculous distinction, rendering the same specifick word when, as they apprehend, it relates to the true God singular, but plural, Dii Gods, when it relates to the objects of the pagan worship.

THIS reflection is the more important that the word ELOHIM has confessedly a singular ELAH used sometimes, but not often, in scripture. Now when the sacred writers make use almost always of the plural word, not from necessity, but from choice, it is hardly possible to believe that this choice is altogether without meaning, and that a word, fit not to inform but to mislead, was employed by the Deity, in the written instructions given to mankind.

THE Jews, and with them those pretended Christians who reject the Trinity, as well as some who admit it, but are loth to lay much stress on the idiom of a language, they do not give themselves the trouble to understand, strive to invalidate this observation, by suggesting that the plural may be used honoris causâ; as Princes, in our days, express themselves, WE and OUR, and persons of condition, spoken to, are addressed by pronouns in the plural number.

BUT not to insist on what is most certain truth, that the scripture language is, in every other instance, opposite to this suggestion, constantly using the singular when Jehovah speaks of himself, and most frequently joining verbs and pronouns in the singular number to the plural ELOHIM; there are many cases in which the expression cannot possibly be reconciled to this Jewish pretence, of which this may be an example. Gen. 3. 22. And Jehovah Elohim said behold the man is become like one of us to know good and evil. Here the expression is distinct, and unambiguous, and not to be twisted to the Jewish construction, by any force of figure, or example; One of us necessarily implies more than one, and the Jews and their followers are so sensible of it, that they pretend Jehovah is here speaking with and to the Angels, bringing them on the level with himself; which he no where else in the scripture does, and which there is no reason to suppose he does in this place, tho' it did not imply an absurdity; because the plural word ELOHIM preceeding sufficiently shews who the Us were, and forbids the application of that pronoun to any other set of beings.

AS this text affords a demonstration, in its own kind, that the plural ELOHIM is not used by chance, but is the fruit of choice, and significative, care is taken in scripture to prevent the grafting the notion of POLYTHEISM on an expression that might lead so naturally to it.

AND therefore Deut. 6. 4. the great command which Christ, being interrogated, declared to be the first and highest of the Law, and which was directed to be laid up in the hearts of the Israelites, to be taught to their children, to be worn as signs upon their hands, and as frontlets between their eyes, and to be written on the posts of their houses, and on their gates, is ushered in with this remarkable admonition; Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord; in the original, Hear, O Israel, Jehovah our Elohim is one Jehovah.

THE word Jehovah is agreed by all to be the proper name or term for expressing the essence of the Deity, it is derived from the verb that signifies to be, and therefore imports being, existence, ὁ ὢν he who is, who exists, necessarily.

THIS noun is singular and knows no plural; wherefore there would be very little occasion for the declaration that Jehovah is one, is not plural, if it were not for the plural word ELOHIM, which might lead into a mistake; to prevent which the declaration was necessary that tho' in Jehovah, there were more ELAHS than one, yet these different ELOHIM were but one Jehovah, one necessarily existent Essence; which is allowing a plurality, not of distinct Deities, but of distinct ELOHIM in the same Essence, Godhead, in Jehovah who is one.

ON occasion of mentioning the word Jehovah, the proper name or term used to signify the Eternal, the necessarily existing Being, the cause and author of all other Being, it may not be improper to observe that this name is of the highest antiquity, coeval in all appearance with the original Revelation, and given by the Deity, to express that grand character of his own nature, which modern wise men value themselves on having, as they imagine, discovered from nature, and reason.

FOR not to mention the authority of Moses, who makes use of that name, just after describing the creation, it appears not to have been unknown to the antients, tho' they lost the sense of it, and confounded themselves with new names for their fictitious Divinities. The oracle in Macrobius declares Jauo to be the chief God; whence it's plain at least that the sound was known by those who consulted. The Zeus of the Greeks was in all appearance from the same source, and the Jupiter of the Romans confesses more clearly that original; antiently Jupiter was written and founded Jovis pater; Jovis was the nominative, or, more properly, Jehovah with the Latin -is for a termination in all cases, and Jovis pater became by corruption, in length of time, Jupiter, tho' it retained more of the original sound in the genitive, and the other cases.

Now, tho' the Roman people and religion were but modern, compared with that of some other nations, yet is their Jovis pater, which took much time to be corrupted into Jupiter, very antient; and, if they had their THEOLOGY from the Hetruscans, or from the Phœnicians, the term Jehovah must have been very pure and distinct, when it came first into Italy, to have remained so long so uncorrupted, as we see it did. No man, in his senses, will think the antient Greeks, and Italians, borrowed from the detested Jews the name of their God, and therefore it may be safely concluded that the name which travelled thus into Greece, and Italy, in the earliest times, was the name of the God of the whole earth used, and honoured by all flesh.

BUT to return to the idea of the Deity given by revelation; tho' the unity of Jehovah is expressly settled, yet it is manifest from great numbers of texts that there are different persons, different agents in this essence, that have different characters, and are to be considered differently by men.

BESIDES

BESIDES Jehovah, who, by way of distinction, may be called the first Person, or the Father, in the language well known to all Christians, there is the Name of Jehovah, or the Name Jehovah, the Word of Jehovah, or the Word Jehovah, and the Angel of Jehovah, or the Angel Jehovah, with several other terms all applicable to the second Person, or the Son, by the circumstances of the several passages; and there is the Spirit of Jehovah, or the Spirit Jehovah to denote the third Person who retains the same name in the Christian language.

THO' the term the Name of Jehovah is become so familiar to our ears in the sense that means only the title or appellation, or, metaphorically, the fame and reputation of any one, yet there are flat texts to shew there is more in the matter; and that personality as it is called, is ascribed to this thing called the Name Jehovah, or the Name of Jehovah.

Exod. 23. 20, 21. Jehovah promises to send his Angel before the people, of whom they are to beware that they do not offend him, for, says Jehovah, my Name is in him. This Name said to be in the Angel is something more than will tally with any reasonable acceptance of the word Name, unless you will suppose that word the Name of Jehovah to mean a Person.

IN like manner Psal. 20. 1. The Name of the God of Jacob defend thee. Isai. 30. 27. Behold, the Name of Jehovah cometh from far. Zech. 14. 9. In that day Jehovah shall be one, and his Name one. With infinite numbers of passages where the Name of Jehovah is said to be placed, to dwell, to act, shew to a demonstration that by the Name Jehovah a person, and not a title, is meant; and, indeed, that person by whom the Deity was to be revealed, discovered, and made known, to mankind.

THAT there is something very extraordinary in this term the Name of Jehovah, and which corresponds ill with the notion of unity of the present set of rebellious Jews, is evident from the silly fictions they set up by which to account for the surprizing use made of it. They suppose something divine to be in the four letters of which the word is composed; that it is the highest crime and prophanation to pronounce them, except in the High-Priest, once a year on the day of expiation, and therefore never wrote, or attempted to pronounce, that word, substituting in all their writings another word for it, and pronouncing, so often as Jehovah occurs in the reading of the scriptures, the word Adonai in place of it. They imagine something so sacred in these letters, that whoever could pronounce them truly might work miracles, and controul the power of nature at pleasure; and they carry their frenzy on this subject so far, as to account for our saviour's miracles, by saying, that, gaining admission into the temple he stole the name Jehovah out of it, rightly wrote, and pointed as it ought to be pronounced; and, by being so possessed of that secret, by the force thereof wrought his wonders, and might have wrought as many more as he would. These circumstances will not prove that the term has the force I have ascribed to it, but surely they will convince any reasonable man, that there is something very remarkable in the expression, which has puzzled the Jews so much, and put them to such ridiculous shifts to get rid of the force of it.

BESIDES the Name there is another term used to signify a Person, or Agent, in or of the Deity, under the title of the Word of Jehovah, or the Word Jehovah. This word has many characters of action and personality that cannot possibly agree to what is simple or proper speech. The Word Jehovah, or of Jehovah came, the Word spoke, the Word acted. In Jehovah will I praise the Word, in God the Elohim will I praise the Word. Jehovah sent his Word, &c. and therefore, without scruple or hesitation, the apostle St. John applies it to the divine Person that was joined to Jesus, agreeable to the plain scope of the Old Testament, and to even the notions of the Jews, of those times; whatever their successors, in opposition to the Christians, may have, since those days, devised to obscure the light of the antient scriptures.

THAT the antient Jews, before their disputes with the Christians turned their brains, by the Word of Jehovah understood an active principle, distinct from the first Person in Jehovah, and also called properly Jehovah, is beyond contradiction evident from their antient Targums, of age, if not equal to the advent of Christ, yet framed before their disputes with the Christians had forced them to coin new and perverse notions. All the actions of a distinct person are attributed to their Mimra Jehovah, the Word of God, in many hundred passages; and often, where Jehovah only is mentioned in the original, yet where according to their conceptions, which originally were true ones, the second Person is meant, they have, without hesitation, in their Paraphrases translated it Mimra Jehovah, or the Word of Jehovah,

Jehovah, which leaves no doubt that the antients understood the Scriptures, in this important article, as the Apostles did, and as we do.

IF the Targum of Onkelos, which is agreed to be of great antiquity, was published before the Gospel came to be the object of the Jews opposition, this argument has all the force already given to it; and, if in an age later, it has no less weight; because no one can suppose that complaisance to the Christians produced the expressions relied on; and indeed all that suspicion is excluded, and additional force is gained to the reflection, by considering that Philo the Jew, who was contemporary with our Saviour, the Ambassador for the Egyptian Jews to Caius Cæsar, unsuspected of Christianity, probably a stranger to it, suspected of a spirit of accommodation with Platonick, or pagan, notions in his writings, intending to make his notions as plausible and palatable to the learned heathens as possible, cannot divest himself of the notion of making the WORD, his Logos, a Person, nay a divine Person, of infinite power, nearly allied to the Deity, tho' with a subordination that he can find no where in the sacred Book.

THERE is still another term, behind, which the Jews have much obscured, by confining the meaning to one of the senses which the word bears, it is ANGEL: The Hebrew word from which Malak is derived, signifies to send, to employ, to send on an errand, to do, or say, any thing; hence Malak, in Greek rendered ἀγγελος, in Latin, promiscuously, Angelus, or Nuntius, in English, an Angel, or Messenger.

To this word, thus signifying, the Translators, who originally were Jews, and all their successors, have given the meaning of what we, in common speech, understand by an Angel, a CREATED SPIRIT, of which, we are taught to believe, there are immense numbers; and, what is worse, they have confined the sense to that meaning, insomuch that, when we hear of the ANGEL JEHOVAH, we are to understand by it such a created Spirit.

BUT it happens unlucky for this construction that, almost, always where the ANGEL JEHOVAH is mentioned, there are characters which shew that this ANGEL is JEHOVAH; for either the Angel calls himself so, and speaks in the first person, as JEHOVAH, or the person, to whom he is sent, acknowledges him to be such, and addresses him under that designation.

Gen. 18. The THREE that appeared to Abraham, in the plains of Mamre, who are called sometimes Men, sometimes Angels, are said to be Jehovah; Jehovah is said to have appeared in that form; HE of the Three, that talks to Abraham speaks in the first person, as Jehovah, and Abraham addresses his answer to HIM, as to Jehovah.

Exod. 8. The Angel Jehovah appeared to Moses in the burning bush, speaks from the bush under the title God, gives himself the significant name, which we translate, I AM THAT I AM, and is plainly understood to be Jehovah. Deut. 33. 16. The good-will of him that dwelt in the bush.

Jud. 9. The Angel that appeared to Manoah's wife, first, and then to himself, is acknowledged to be Jehovah. And every Angel, called, of Jehovah, that appeared, or seemed in vision to appear, to the Prophets, either speak as Jehovah, or are spoken to as such.

Exod. 23. 20. The Angel whom Jehovah was to send before the Israelites, and whom he calls his Angel, had his NAME in him, and was therefore to be observed. And,

Malachy 3. 1. The Angel (which we translate the Messenger) of the Covenant, is declared to be the Lord; and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple: even the Angel of the Covenant, whom ye delight in.

THE Malak, the Messenger, therefore, the sent, the Angel Jehovah, or of Jehovah, we see is not always used to signify a created Being, but on the contrary to denote a Person of Jehovah, of the Deity, sent as a messenger to execute the will of Jehovah, of the Deity; and accordingly Christ, upon many occasions, declares that he is sent of the Father, and came to do the will of him that sent him: which tallies exactly with the language of, and with the Ideas given in, the Old Testament.

ALL these terms, the NAME, the WORD, the ANGEL OF JEHOVAH, with several others of the same kind, which evidently shew a distinction of Persons in Jehovah, are by the characters that attend them, clearly applicable to one and the same person, in the Gospel called the SON, from the second Psalms; the express image of the Father's person, who thought it no robbery to be equal with the Father; and by whom, and for whom, the world was made.

THE Old Testament, in multitudes of texts, mentions a third character, with attributes of action as a distinct Person, the Spirit of Jehovah,

Jehovah, which is said to do, and direct many things, almost always under that specifick name, and in distinction to the other Persons or characters in the Deity; and the New Testament formally makes this Spirit a distinct Person, acting a proper part in the Economy of grace to mankind.

WHEN these things are duly weighed, men must be convinced that the godly, serious Jews, who studied their Scriptures with attention, and without prepossession, must have been satisfied that there was a distinction of Persons in the Deity; and that the WORD Jehovah, or of Jehovah, for example, was distinct from the Spirit, and both from the Father, who sent the Word; and then their surprize will cease at the freedom, and easiness, with which Christ and his Apostles speak of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, as distinct Persons of the Deity, as a thing well known and understood, without any preamble or apology; whereas, if this had not been a notion commonly received by the intelligent, it is impossible that the Preacher of Salvation could have made use of, or applied it, without having first explained it, and so prepared the hearers for it.

AND, accordingly, we find that, when Christ was examined by the Rulers, they did not at all boggle at the doctrine which mentioned the Son of God, but asked him whether he pretended to be such; and, upon his saying that he was, concluded him guilty of blasphemy, without further ceremony; which shews that the Son of God was a phrase known and familiar to them, as indeed it must be from the second Psalms. And surely they could not have entertained an idea of the SON, without also admitting an idea of the FATHER, which must have made that term also familiar to them.

So that in this instance it is, as in almost every other it will, on a careful examination, appear to be, the New Testament speaks the language of the Old; the principles and the sentiments are the same; and the New does little more than explain, and apply, what, by corrupt Imagination, through length of time, was obscured or perverted, and in some degree lost in the Old.

THE same consideration that makes the knowledge of the TRINITY necessary for us, made it so to the believing Jews, to whom that mystery was disclosed in the Old Testament in writing, and made it so, also, to the first believers, to whom the mercy of God was discovered, whilst hieroglyphical records only were used; and therefore it is very reasonable to expect to meet with some foot-steps of this discovery, some hieroglyphical representation, in which it was to be recorded.

WE see the making of molten and graven IMAGES, representations of things in the heavens or in the earth, to be worshipped and served as Gods, was a practice as extensive, as it was offensive, in the most early times, to the Deity; and, as nothing could in itself, and considered literally, be more absurd, and less deducible from, and consistent with, nature and reason, than to make any bodily representation of the Deity, and to serve and worship that figure as divine, it may be pretty securely concluded that, great as the abuse was, it was not altogether human invention, but, probably, a notorious abuse from the wantonness of Imagination of some laudable, sacred, INSTITUTION.

THE practise is bitterly censured, and, under the most severe penalties, prohibited, in the Law of Moses. No representation at all was to be made of Jehovah, nor was there any Image of HIM to be met with in the tabernacle, or temple, to whom the people should bow down, contrary to the practice of all the heathen nations.

YET, nevertheless, both in the tabernacle and temple there were hieroglyphical, or emblematical Figures set up over the Mercy-Seat, called CHERUBIM, and between, or in them the Deity was to dwell, or reside, and to his Presence, in that place, the blood was to be brought in within the Vail, on the day of Expiation.

THO' the form of these Cherubim was so well known in the days of Moses that, without any other description of them but the name, the workmen being commanded made them; yet the knowledge of the figure they were of, was so little enquired after by the Jews, when they revolted from God, and receded from the purity of their religion, that they seemed totally to have lost it, before they built the second temple. For it appears evidently that they had no Cherubim there, from these circumstances: That Philo knew nothing of their form; that Josephus the learned and inquisitive priest, who lived under the second temple, and had proper occasion to have known something about them, had any appearance of them been there, owns the ignorance of himself and of his nation, acknowledging they knew nothing about them, but that they were Images of some sort of winged Animals; and the conclusion from this last observation, and from the utter silence of the Jews, since the days of Christ, on that subject, is certain; unless one will choose to suppose that Josephus, and the

the other later Jews dissembled, and concealed, their knowledge, lest some advantage might from thence have arisen to the Christians; which is not probable, because the Christians, had not become, so early, so much the object of the Jews jealousy and aversion, as afterwards they were.

THESE Cherubim were to be beaten out of the same piece of gold that covered the Ark of the Testimony, called the Mercy-Seat; they were to look inwards towards the Mercy-Seat, the blood, on the day of Expiation, was to be sprinkled on the Mercy-Seat, between them; Jehovah was to dwell, to reside, between, or in them; from thence he was to give directions, and responses; and these figures, with the Mercy-Seat and the Ark, was all the furniture of the Sanctum Sanctorum, the most holy place, the emblem of the divine residence.

As this was the most holy place, and these figures made out of the Propitiatorium, the Mercy-Seat, were the most sacred Emblems, it cannot be doubted they were of very high significancy, by any person who knows that the whole knowledge of early times was delivered and recorded in symbols and hieroglyphical representations, and who recollects that every other branch of the Jewish institution was emblematical.

AND, if these emblems rightly understood, conveyed knowledge, and directed the sentiments, and the service of the antient Israelites, whose chief joy was meditation on the Law of God, under the first temple; we cannot help lamenting the misfortune of the Jews, under the second, who surely had lost all the benefits, the information by those symbols could give; and who, certainly, could not bring in the blood on the day of Expiation within the Vail, and sprinkle it according to the first directions of the Law.

IF the loss of the knowledge of those Emblems had been fortuitous, occasioned only by the length of time, between the destruction of the first, and the building of the second temple, in which all those that knew the form of these Emblems, in the first, had perished, the Jews case would be much to be pitied; but it is by so much the less a proper object of compassion, that abundance of circumstances shew the loss was owing to their own gross fault, and perverseness, which justifies the judgment of Blindness the Deity has been pleased, in pursuance of many denunciations, and even of the COVENANT solemnly entered into by their fathers, to execute against them.

THE first Temple was destroyed, and the people carried away, because of their rebellion against Jehovah, and their running after the false Gods of the nations; and it seems pretty certain that those who forsook Jehovah, entirely, would very little mind, or meditate on, the sense of the symbols, or service instituted by him; and if any of them returned to their land, it is not very likely they would be solicitous about what they knew nothing of.

IT is surprizingly remarkable that, from the promulgation of the Law on Sinai, till the destruction of Jerusalem with the first temple, the depraved turn of the Jews, who followed their own imaginations, was to Polytheism, quitting Jehovah for the foolish gods of the nations; and that, contrary to the clearest evidence, though they had amongst them the ARK of Jehovah, the whole ornaments and liturgy of the Temple, the fire of God burning on their altar, the EPHOD with URIM to direct them, the Prophets inspired to instruct them, and the interposition of frequent miracles, to prove Jehovah the only, the true God.

AND it is equally remarkable that, after their return from the captivity, when all these extraordinary pieces of evidences failed, notwithstanding their many faults and follies, they never once nationally swerved from Jehovah to the service of the gods of the nations; but, by guarding against that error, and the faulty effects of encouraging Imagination, they ran into the contrary extreme; because of the UNITY of Jehovah they were unwilling to think of the PLURALITY of Elohim; and, lest Imagination should carry them too far, they would go no farther than the Letter of the Law, and the Exterior of Institutions and services, which, considered purely in that light, signified nothing, or was apt to mislead; neglecting the precept so often inculcated, and so carefully practiced by the godly, to observe, to meditate on the Law, and thereby to discover, and comfort themselves with, the merciful and beneficent meaning of it. This turn of mind lost the knowledge of the Cherubim, it prevented their seeing the Messias in Jesus.

As the Cherubim are not fully described in the history of the framing and building of the tabernacle, or temple, and as the Priests, who might have seen them in the Sanctum Sanctorum, and the other persons, who must have seen them on the walls and doors of the temple, might have failed, before the second temple was compleatly finished, which would have furnished an excuse to the succeeding Jews for for being without those emblems in the second temple, and for neglecting the knowledge thereby conveyed, it pleased God to exhibit to one of his prophets, Ezekiel, in vision at different times, the figure of these Emblems, which he has in two several places, Chap. 1st and 10th, carefully recorded. And it is not a little surprizing, that tho' the Jews unanimously hold Ezekiel to be a prophet, and these passages to be inspired, yet they never thought fit to give the Figures he describes a place in their temple, or to guess at the meaning of them, though they hold that those visions contain the most important mystery.

THE description of the CREATURES, seen in this vision by Ezekiel, is so full, and so anxiously, and laboriously given, that there is no mistaking some of the great lines of it. Each CHERUB had four heads, at least faces, and but one body; each had hands of a man and wings; and the four faces were, first, the face of a Bull, which it properly called a Cherub; secondly, to the right of the Bull, the face of a Man; thirdly, to the right of the man, the face of a Lion; and the faces of the Man and Lion are said Chap. 1. v. 10. to have been on the right side, whereas the face of the Bull is said to have been on the left side; and fourthly, the face of an Eagle, without taking notice of any particular conjunction between the face of the Bull and that of the Eagle.

AND the prophet takes so much care to inculcate that the Creatures, or Figures thus represented, were the CHERUBIM, and that the description in the first and the tenth Chapter, relate to the same Cherubim, that there can be no doubt he describes the very Cherubim placed in the tabernacle and temple; unless it can be supposed that this description was given, on set purpose, to deceive and mislead us.

KNOWING thus, from Ezekiel, the form of the Cherubim, and knowing the usage of the most antient nations, particularly the Egyptians, of framing compounded figures of this kind, for hieroglyphical or symbolical purposes; from the remains of their antiquities still extant, we can entertain no doubt that this representation was significative. He who cannot believe that the Cherubim was set in the Holy of Holies to represent one animal, compounded of Bull, Man, Lion, and Eagle, must necessarily admit that the faces of these animals, so joined, were intended to signify several characters, powers, or persons, united together in one.

THE Italian Janus was bifrons, sometimes quadrifrons; Diana was triformis; many Egyptian monuments shew two, sometimes three heads of different creatures to one body; in vast numbers of gems, particularly those called Abraxa's, human bodies have the heads sometimes of dogs, sometimes of lions, sometimes of eagles or hawks, &c. and no one can doubt that each of those representations was symbolical.

IN considering this subject we must recollect that, though the building of the tabernacle was not so early as to give birth to those strange compositions over the heathen world, yet this Figure was exhibited, immediately, upon the expulsion of man from Paradise; and was so well known, when Israel left Egypt, that the workman made the Cherubim, without any other direction than that of making them out of the gold that composed the Mercy-Seat, and placing them on either end of it looking towards the Mercy-Seat, and stretching their wings over it. So that the compound Figures of the antients, to represent their Deities, had no other original but that, at the east end of the garden of Eden.

HOWEVER the Emblems, or representations, of the heathen divinities may have been complicated of the forms of different animals, originally; yet we see, with length of time, they separated those Symbols, supposed the different Figures to be different Deities, and at last worshipped them apart.

THE Egyptian Apis, the Bull, in imitation whereof the Israelites made their golden Calf, and Jeroboam made his Calves, was but one of those figures; and the deity called Baal amongst the Syrians, which is also called the Heifer Baal, was the same, and yet was the representation of the great God, the LORD of all.

THE Persian Mithras was in all the Devices of the servants of that god pictured a Lion, or with a Lion's head; and the Egyptian Sphinx, which stood at the entry of their temples, had but two of the cherubical figures, joined in a strange manner, the head of the Man put on the body of the Lion.

THE Eagle was to the Greeks, and Romans, an emblem sacred to Jupiter or Jovis, their great God, whom they pictured like a man; in the talons of this bird they put a thunderbolt, and this expression of thunder, proceeding from clouds, born by the Eagle, whose way in the air is among the clouds, was the ensign of Νεφεληγερέτης Ζεύς: and we know, from Sanchoniathon, that the Tyrians had a pillar sacred cred to Wind, or Air in motion, as well as they had to Fire, built as they said by Ufous the son of Hypsouranias, which Fire and Wind they worshipped as gods.

WE know from antient authors, and we see in antient gems and other monuments, that the Egyptians were very much accustomed to make the body of their Image, or representation, human, sometimes with the head of a Lion, sometimes with that of a Hawk, or Eagle, and sometimes with that of a Bull, a Ram, or some other horned creature.

AND as, from the original exhibition of the Cherubim renewed, and recalled to its proper use, in the tabernacle, and temple, we see the antients had a pattern from whence they might have taken those representations, which they monstrously abused, we may reasonably conclude that these representations which, naturally, and without some institution, would never have come into the heads of any men, flowed from an early practice, that had a different intent from that, to which it was at last turned.

AND, from the application made by the antient Pagans of each of the figures in the Cherubim, to signify a different Deity, we may with reason conclude, that they understood that particular figure, in the Cherubim, which they chose for their protector or god, represented, in the hieroglyphical usage of the early times, the power, the thing, or person, that they intended to serve.

THUS, for example, if the curled hairs, and horns, in the Bull's head were, in hieroglyphical writing, made the emblem of Fire in general, or Fire at the orb of the Sun, those, who took material fire for their deity would set up that Emblem, and worship it.

IF the Lion's piercing eyes, or any other consideration, brought that animal to be the emblem of Light in general, or of Light issuing from the body of the Sun, such as took Light for their god, if any such were, would set up the Lion for the Emblem.

AND if the Eagle's soaring flight, and commerce thereby with the air, brought that bird to be the emblem of Air, such as imagined a divinity in the Air, in Clouds, in Winds, would take that bird to represent their deity.

AND the HUMAN FIGURE in the Cherubim must, one should think, be the most natural occasion of that universal mistake which all the heathens, at length, dropped into of picturing their gods with human bodies, and the very earliest gave some countenance to, in joining parts of the human body to, almost, all their representations of their gods.

Now, so it is, that we do know from innumerable texts of Scripture, and from many passages in heathen historians, and Mythologists, that the objects of the earliest pagan adoration, after losing the idea of the true God, were the Powers in the Heavens, that were supposed to maintain this system; the Sun, Moon, and Stars, the Host of Heaven, the Queen of Heaven; Fire, which was supposed to be one of the chief agents, in supporting the motion of the universe; Light issuing from Fire, and the Air, Clouds, Winds, &c. which had infinite force, and were supposed to act a very considerable part in the government, and preservation of the material world.

IN particular, we know that Fire at the orb of the Sun was worshipped by the antient Egyptians, who made use of Apis, the Bull, for their Emblem; and that the worshippers of Baal, the Heifer, believed their god had the command of Fire. For, in the remarkable contention between Jehovah and Baal, managed on the one side by Elijah, on the part of Jehovah, and on the other by four hundred and fifty Priests, on the part of Baal, the test of all was, which of their Deities could command Fire to come down from heaven to consume the sacrifice, and the issue disgraced Baal, and destroyed all his Priests. And therefore, it is no rash conclusion, that the Ox's or Bull's head, was the hieroglyphical Emblem of Fire, perhaps Fire at the orb of the Sun.

WE know also that many of the Egyptians, and of the neighbouring nations worshipped Light; it was difficult to separate the idea of light from that of fire. Those that served the moon and planets had not fire for their object. The Persians, who worshipped fire, and eminently the body of the Sun, had Light, necessarily, in esteem, their beneficent principle. Oromasdes was Light. Job talked of worshipping Light as idolatry. There were several temples in Egypt, and in Canaan, to the Light of the Sun; and in Egypt, as well as in Persia, the Lion was a sacred Emblem. Wherefore, it seems highly probable the Lion was used as the Symbol or Emblem of Light, as the Bull was made use of as the Emblem of Fire.

WE know, also, that the earliest heathens took the Air, Wind, that thing which in the antient languages is expressed by a word signifying, promiscuously, Wind and Spirit, that invisible agent which we feel, and which performs so many considerable effects in nature without being seen, for a Deity; that to it they ascribed inspiration; their Sybils, their deliverers of Oracles were inflated; futurities, the will of their God was discovered, by the countenance of Clouds, and the flight of Birds, which were religiously observed by Augurs, in the Hebrew, Cloud-mongers; Thunder was the voice of their God, which was portentous, and much observed. Thunder was ascribed to the great Jove, the Thunderer, and the Eagle with the thunder-bolt was his ensign; whence we may, pretty safely, conclude that the Eagle, to the worshippers of the Air, represented, hieroglyphically, Air, Wind, Spirit.

IF the Deity, to give some idea of himself from a sensible object, had made choice of the Heavens as the sensible object, from which to take the imperfect idea of his immensity, personality, and manner of existence and operation; if, by the vastness and extent of them, his immensity was to be represented; if by fire, the first Person, necessarily and continually generating and sending forth light, the second Person, and constantly and necessarily supplied by Air, or Spirit, the third Person, the Trinity coexisting, and cooperating, for the support of the whole, and in aid of each other, was to be represented; then, upon discovering this to mankind, the Heavens would become the type of Jehovah, the divine Essence; Fire would become the type of the first Person, Light of the second, and Air, or Spirit of the third; and whatever EMBLEMS, in hieroglyphical writing, were used to express these, as the names of the one, would, or might be used, for the appellations, or names of the other.

So that, if this resemblance, or representation, were to be expressed in stone, wood, or metal, the emblems of Fire, Light, and Air, or Spirit, that is, from what has been said, the Bull, the Lion, and the Eagle, ought to be conjoined together into the form of one Animal; and every body, who understood the hieroglyphical emblems, would immediately think on the Heavens which they represented, and, from thence, raise to himself the intended image of the Trinity in the divine Essence.

NOW we do know that the word SHEMIM, used always for the Heavens, in the sacred language which God has chosen to express his Revelation in, is plural, as the other word ELOHIM is; that its natural signification is Names, and that it has been often made use of to signify the Deity. And if the Characters, or Powers in the Heavens have been chosen to point out, and express the Persons in the Deity, we can perceive the reason why the Heavens have got the appellation of the Names, by way of eminence, as they denote, or are descriptive of, those sacred Persons.

AND we do, further, know that the first turn the antient heathens took from the worship of the true, the invisible, God, was to the worship of the Heavens, those Names; which can, pretty naturally, be accounted for, if they were accustomed to think on the Powers, or Characters in the Heavens with any sacred regard, and to believe that they supported themselves, and all the rest of this system, by one unerring, perpetual, action and reaction upon themselves, and on every thing else, in the material world.

THIS defection from the knowledge and service of the true God began as early as the project at Babel. The scheme, then, was to build a tower or temple to the Heavens; and, tho' the design was then broken, by making the projectors fall out amongst themselves about the LITURGY, and form of Worship, which was confounding their language, yet it soon took place, in different families, and countries, tho' with different emblems, ceremonies, and services. Abraham, by the direction of God, left Ur of the Chaldees, where the rebellious service, probably to the Light, had begun; and was, as were his son, and grandchild, after him, for many years, kept under the immediate direction of God, itinerant in regions that were then but thinly peopled, and with the inhabitants whereof they had but small intercourse, to prevent the infection that might have come from communication with idolaters; and, by the immediate act of providence, his race was brought down to Egypt, and exceedingly multiplied there, under particular manners, and institutions, that kept them distinct from the people of that great Empire; which, as it was one of the first mighty monarchies, so was confessedly the most noted for the learning, and superstitious profession, of the pagan religion; and chosen therefore by the Deity as the scene in which his wonders were to be wrought, for the confusion of idolatrous imagination, and for establishing the authority of himself, his Law-giver, and consequently his Laws, with the Israelitish People.

As substituting the visible similitude in the room of the invisible God was the first, it was the most criminal, the most dangerous, abuse that ever crept into religion; and, therefore, the strongest, the most laborious, efforts, if one may be allowed to say so, were made by the Deity to correct, and prevent it; and to set men right in that particular;

particular, Reasonings, of any kind, could not have had the same weight to convince the idolatrous Egyptians, or the Israelites, who might have imbibed some of their notions, that the Heavens, and in them the Fire, the Light, the Air, or Spirit, were no real Gods, and were but servants of Jehovah, their maker ; as the repeated miracles wrought by Moses, the servant of Jehovah, in the sight of both nations ; giving animal life to inanimate matter ; turning rods into serpents ; producing multitudes of frogs ; turning water into blood ; turning light into darkness ; making the air produce swarms of noxious insects ; inflicting diseases, and death, on certain classes, whilst others were safe ; dividing the sea ; commanding fire, and cloud, to execute his command, &c. miracles which were, to all intents, sufficient to convince the Egyptians of their error, and to guard Israel against falling into it.

AND, accordingly, we see the point, principally, laboured in the writings left by Moses, is asserting to Jehovah the power, preeminence, and dominion, attributed by the pagans to the Heavens. Hence his books begin with the creation, and formation of those Heavens by the word of God ; the history of the destruction of the earth, by the flood, is minutely recorded ; the constant claim of the Deity is to be confessed as the Creator of the Heavens and the Earth, and the giver of all the good things that were supposed to come, immediately, from them. The chief view of the Law of the two Tables, is to deny service to all beings but Jehovah ; the professions of the faithful were that Jehovah made the Heavens ; was the sovereign Lord and Master ; and in those professions, the miracles in Egypt, &c. are referred to, as the foundation of their belief and acknowledgment.

IT calls for very particular attention that the first, and the grand mistakes in religion proceeded from taking literally, what was meant figuratively, or emblematically only ; and so denying, in effect, the symbolical meaning, from which several impious absurdities followed, terminating in absolute infidelity, where some sort of impertinent belief was not maintained by extravagant *imagination*s.

THE ridicule of this mistake appears very strong, in taking symbolical representations for the Realities intended to be represented ; whatever pretence a Revelation, recorded in words by writing, might have to be so, literally, understood, sure it was extremely perverse to take pictures only, for the original things, or persons designed to be exhibited by the pictures.

AND yet this folly we see mankind fell into almost in every particular. The Elohim were represented by the Heavens, and these, again, in Sculpture, or Picture, by the Bull, the Lion, and the Eagle joined. The first who wandered from the truth mistook the Heavens, Fire, Light, and Air, or Spirit, for what they were intended to represent, the invisible Trinity; and as such worshipped them, using the figures of the Bull, the Lion, and the Eagle, only as hieroglyphical representations of those Powers, which they truly were intended to be. But their successors, in process of time, forgetting the supposed influence of those Powers in the Air, or Heavens, and, observing religious service paid to the forms of those animals, made a second mistake, looked no more to the Heavens, as their Gods, but stupidly imagined a Deity to be inherent in those graven, or molten, Images which they worshipped, and served, and from whom they looked for favour, and protection; and, when those things became too absurd to be credited, and formally defended, Imagination was set to work, and produced such ridiculous systems in respect to the Deity, as endangered the losing the knowledge, even, of the original Symbols, and helped to introduce, total Unbelief and Atheism.

IT was taking Symbols for Realities, that made men imagine a purifying quality in the blood of beasts; that made them fancy that Hecatombs slaughtered placated the Deity; and that God was delighted with the smoke that arose from the fat of burnt-offerings.

IT was laying hold of the letter, and letting the meaning slip, that induced men to sacrifice their first-born, to shed in sacrifice human blood; the blood of the first-born was to atone; the seed of the woman was to relieve mankind from misery; the first-born were sacred to God. Zealots to the letter, imagined the fruit, at least, the first-fruit of the womb had this virtue, and therefore offered it, literally, to their Gods, which, at last, made human sacrifice fashionable.

IN short, looking at the external symbols, and letter, and not at the apparent, certain, meaning of both, drove the heathens to all their follies; and first misled, and afterwards hardened, and confirmed, firmed, the Jews in those absurdities, under which they are ridiculous, and miserable, to this day.

As the practice of the earliest heathens, who first apostatised to the service of the Heavens, in setting up the figures of the several animals, whereof the Cherubim was composed, for the symbols, or emblems, of the different Powers in the Heavens, which they worshipped, is strong evidence what those figures were, originally, intended to represent: it becomes necessary for any one, who would have further satisfaction in this particular, to search the scriptures to see whether, in the several appearances of the Deity therein related, there may not be some characters fit to confirm, or destroy, the opinion that the figures in the Cherubim were the emblems of fire, light, and air, or spirit.

AND, upon due enquiry, it will be found that, almost, always when the manner of Jehovah's appearance is described, the visible symbol of his presence was fire, or light, or air, or all three together: not to mention that the appearance of fire is generally, and, almost, necessarily attended with that of light.

THE first appearance described is Gen. 15. where, to confirm the covenant to Abraham, the parts of the divided beasts, and the fowls, being set over against each other, the appearance of a smoking furnace, and a lamp of fire passed between them. That this appearance contained fire, light, and air, or spirit, is evident.

THE second appearance, of which the form is mentioned, was under the oaks of Mamre, Gen. 18. where the figure is not particularly described, tho' probably it was human, or like to it; and all we can gather from this, is, that the appearance was under the form of three Persons.

THE next appearance described is that to Moses, in the bush, Exod. 3. what was exhibited to view was a burning bush which was not consumed, and this exhibition could not possibly be without light; whether it was attended with cloud, or smook, the text does not say.

THE next emblem of the presence of God, described, is the pillar of fire, and cloud, that guided and guarded, the Israelites in the wilderness; if light be allowed to the fire, in this exhibition, all the three are joined.

IMMEDIATELY after this we see Jehovah giving the Law solemnly, from Sinai; he is said, Exod. 19. 18. to have descended upon upon it in fire: Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoak; it was covered with a thick cloud, and there were on it thunders and lightnings; and Moses takes notice, Deut. 4. 15. in cautioning the Israelites against graven images, and the making the similitudes of any creatures, to be worshipped as God; that on the day that Jehovah spoke to them in Horeb, out of the midst of the fire, they saw no manner of similitude; by which, the text shews, must be meant the similitude of any animal: Besides, that it is certain there must have been the appearance of fire, and light, from it as well as from the lightning, and the cloud which, naturally, denotes air, or spirit, whose peculiar language thunder is.

WHEN the tabernacle of the congregation was removed, and pitched without the camp, upon the people's rebellion whilst Moses tarried yet in Horeb, the pillar of cloud descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, so often as the Lord talked with Moses; and all the people, upon seeing this cloud, worshipped. Exod. 35. 9, 10.

WHEN Moses desired to see the way of the Lord, and Jehovah was to proclaim his name, he caused his glory to pass by him, Exod. 33. 22. Now if this glory of the Lord was of the same kind with that which filled the tabernacle, and temple, on many occasions, and which Ezekiel, in his account of the Cherubim, describes, it must have consisted of fire, light, and air, or spirit.

WHEN the tabernacle was set up, Exod. 40. 34, 35. the cloud of the Lord covered the tent, and the glory of Jehovah filled the tabernacle. When Aaron blessed the people, for the first time, upon entering upon his office, Levit. 9. 23. the glory of Jehovah appeared to all the people. When the temple was compleated, and the sacred musick had played, 1 Kings 8. 10, 11. and 2 Chron. 5. 13, 14. the cloud filled the house of Jehovah, so that the Priests could not stand to minister, by reason of the cloud: for the glory of Jehovah had filled the house of Jehovah. And 2 Chron. 7. 2. When Solomon had done praying, at the dedication of the temple, the glory of the Lord filled the house. And the Priests could not enter into the house of Jehovah, because the glory of Jehovah had filled Jehovah's house.

Now, if we examine what appearance this glory of Jehovah had, when he was, as one may say, in person taking possession of his house, and can with certainty discover it, we may with confidence conclude that the sensible image it bore, was what God intended should should give the idea of the material thing, to which he, whose presence that appearance denoted, was to be assimilated.

THE common notion of glory has splendor, a glare of light attending it; and, when brought into sculpture, or painting, is figured like rays issuing from the sun; and, in the passages above-mentioned, a cloud, another emblem, was attendant.

IN Ezekiel chap. 1. where the Cherub is described, the glory of Jehovah is also strongly painted. The vision begins with a whirlwind, a great cloud, v. 4. and a fire infolding itself. v. 13. As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures, and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning. v. 26, 27, 28. The appearance of a Man, on the appearance of a throne; and the prophet saw, as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it: from the appearance of his loyns even upward, and from the appearance of his loyns even downward, he saw as it were the appearance of fire; and it had brightness round about. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This, says the prophet, was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord: and, when he saw it, he fell down upon his face. And chap. 10. v. 4. where the same Cherubim are described, the court is said to have been full of the brightness of Jehovah's glory, whilst the house was filled with the cloud.

THIS description shews that fire, light, and cloud, were the principal, if not the only, ingredients in the appearance of the glory of Jehovah; and the preternatural appearance of light, shining from the skin of Moses's face, after the glory of Jehovah had passed by him, shews, pretty well, what share light had in the composition of that glory, which the Apostle Paul seems to have understood, when writing to the Hebrews, chap. 1. he speaks of the brightness of the Father's glory, the express image of his Person.

BESIDES these appearances of the glory of the Lord, Jehovah acts in character, when Levit. 9. 23. pleased with the priesthood of Aaron he sends fire, the emblem of himself, out from his face, to burn the sacrifice on the altar. When 2 Chron. 7. 1. Fire, upon the ending of Solomon's prayer, came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt-offering. And when 1 Kings 13. 38. the decision was made, as above-mentioned, between Jehovah, and Baal, by fire from heaven.

THESE being, perpetually, the signals of Jehovah's presence, the symbols made use of to denote his appearance; these having been, jointly, or severally, the objects of the earliest pagans religious services, the Pagans acknowledging the bull, the lion, and the eagle, as the emblems of these their divinities, which, in length of time, they mistook for what they were intended only to represent; and the bull, the lion, and the eagle, joined in the appearance of one living creature, having been consecrated, as one may say, in the Cherubim, for the residence of the presence of God in the Holy of Holies, one can hardly doubt that the figures, joined in the Cherubim, which were the emblems of fire, light, and air, or spirit, the ordinary similitude under which the Deity usually appeared, were intended to represent those characters, or persons, in the divine Essence, that fire, light, and air, or spirit, resembled.

WHATEVER occasion man might have had for the knowledge of the distinction of persons in the Deity, before the FALL, yet it seems certain the manner of his salvation, after his defection, could not have been imparted to him without revealing that truth, undiscoversable by the light of nature. He could not possibly know how, or upon what account, his sins were to be pardoned, and himself reinstated in the favour of God, without being told that the Deity consists of three Persons; that of those three, pursuant to a covenant made before the CREATION, the second was to take on him flesh, and in the form of man to suffer, and thereby atone for the sins of mankind; and that the third was to keep a communication with the souls of men, for their guidance and comfort. And man could not possibly keep up, with any certainty, the memory of this Revelation without some memorial, some symbolical act, or thing, to preserve it; or look upon such symbol, knowing the sense of it, without gratefully confessing his obligations to those divine Persons, to whom he owed his being, his comfort, his salvation.

A Christian, the most important article of whose Creed it is that the Deity was joined to the humanity, that the Word was made flesh, that a Person in Jehovah became the Son of Man, and a Man, born of a Virgin, became the Son of Jehovah, will not scruple, when he is told that in the representation of the Deity exhibited under symbols in the Cherubim, for the instruction and comfort of mankind, the figure of a Man is added to these that represent the Trinity; that this figure of a Man is placed at the right hand of that emblem that represents the Father, the first Person, the Fire, and that it is, in a particular manner, conjoined with the Lion, the second Person, the Light. He firmly believes what these figures, thus explained, represent; and must think it agreeable to the great condescension, and goodness of the merciful God, to acquaint man, from the beginning, with what so nearly concerned him, and what, without Revelation, he could possibly have no idea of.

THE hieroglyphical representation in the Cherubim must not be considered, singly, from the form of it; but to that must be added the rank it had in the tabernacle, and the ceremony, or emblematical action in which it was concerned.

IT has been already observed that the Cherubim were to be made out of the same pure gold that composed the mercy-seat, which they were to cover with their wings; and all that is described to us, further, of their posture is that, standing one at each end of the mercy seat, their faces were to look towards each other, and towards the mercy-seat.

THIS mercy-seat, the space between the two Cherubim, is described, particularly, as the place of the residence of the Deity, and of his appearance; he was to inhabit the Cherubim, or between them; and he was to appear, there, in the cloud, and to declare his will from thence.

BESIDES this, there was a stated solemn ceremony to be performed, once a year, on the day of Expiation, before the mercy-seat: the Priest was to bring within the vail the blood of the sin-offering, and with it to make atonement for all the people, by sprinkling of the blood upon the mercy-seat, and seven times before it; and this blood, so sprinkled, is said to expiate.

THE atoning blood, in this highest act of the Mosaical institution, was sprinkled on that place, the mercy-seat, towards which the several faces of the Cherubim were turned: and, if they were to see, they had no object to look at, on this solemn day of expiation, but the Priest in the holy garment, the emblem of the second Person, the Light, sprinkling this blood on, and towards, the mercy-seat; which could hardly fail to raise the idea, that the blood, so sprinkled, was the object the divine Persons, whom these figures represented, looked upon, as the propitiation, the ransom, the atonement.

AND if it was necessary, towards making this emblem compleat, to represent all the Persons as looking upon, and accepting this blood, then it became necessary to make two several Cherubs, and to place them at different ends of the mercy-seat, that the face of each figure might be turned towards the spot, the blood was to be sprinkled on; because had there been no more than one Cherub, two only of the four faces could have been directed to the place on which the blood was to be sprinkled; besides that, the significancy of the circumstance of their faces looking towards each other, which deserves a separate consideration, would have been lost.

NOTHING is more certain than that, under the Mosaick æconomy, the Deity was to reside, to dwell, to appear, in the midst of the people, in the place where he was to put his Name; the place where, and where only, in exclusion of all others, sacrifice was to be offered, the altar was to be set up, and every other ceremonial, or emblematical act of their religion was to be performed, and more particularly the highest in, or between, the Cherubim.

WHATSOEVER religious act was done, in this place, is said to be done before Jehovah, in the Hebrew, always, before the faces of Jehovah.

NOW, if the several faces of the Cherubim are taken to represent the Persons in the Deity, and therefore to be called the faces of Jehovah, the reason of this phraseology will be obvious, as the phrase it self will be significant.

IT is not to be dissembled that the Hebrew words, translated before the faces, are often made use of to signify before, or in presence of, without regard to plurality of faces; but it deserves enquiry how so strange a phraseology came to take place.

AND it seems to call for very particular attention that, before the Mosaick institution, and, indeed, from the first Revelation, the presence of the Deity is represented as confined, with respect to religious acts, to a place, and what is done, in that place, is said to be done before the faces of Jehovah.

Cain is said to have gone out from the faces of Jehovah, and to have dwelt in the land of Nod, to the eastward of Eden. Now, if by the faces of Jehovah is not meant some particular place of his immediate presence, and if, on the contrary, his presence, as we translate late it, in general, is understood, the thing will not be true; Cain could not convey himself out of the presence of God, which is every where, but he might remove from that place which he chose, in a particular manner, for his residence, in the celebration of religious acts.

IN like manner, the pot of manna, Exod. 16. is ordered to be laid up, and was accordingly laid up, before the faces of Jehovah, before the Testimony, long before the Mosaick tabernacle, and ark was made, or erected. Laying it up any where would, in one sense, have been laying it up before the Lord; but Aaron understood the meaning of the expression to be, to lay it up before the Testimony, where the faces of the Cherubim were.

NOR need any one scruple admitting the force of this last observation; for it is evident from this, as well as other texts, that the Israelites had an ark, and a tabernacle, consecrated to the residence of Jehovah, and destined to religious service, before the Mosaick tabernacle was reared up.

UPON the provocation of the Israelites, in making the golden calf, Jehovah being highly displeased, the tabernacle was by Moses taken out of the center, and removed far from the camp, and was called the tabernacle of the congregation, where Jehovah descended in a cloud, to give directions to Moses. Now this happened, in the interval, between Moses's receiving instructions for building the tabernacle that was made in the wilderness, and his giving orders for the contribution for that work; which evinces that the Israelites had, upon their going out of Egypt, a tabernacle for Jehovah, distinguished by his presence, and the symbols of it, before that reared by Moses was prepared.

THO' the having a tabernacle for Jehovah sufficiently imply the having an ark, with the mercy-seat and cherubim, the furniture of it, yet there is other evidence to shew that the Israelites actually had an ark, different from that made by Moses. For when the ark, which had been taken by the Philistines, was locally at Kirjath-jearim, Saul being at Gibeah of Benjamin, 1 Sam. 14. 18. orders Abijah to bring him thither the ark of God; and the penman of that book adds a remark, for at that time there was an ark of God, besides that with the children of Israel. And when the ark, made by Moses, after having been carried from Kirjath-jearim, was lodged in Zion, Uriah, who had left Joab at the siege of Rabbah, being pressed to go to his house and to his wife, excuses himself, alledging it was not proper for him to take so much ease, when the Ark, and Israel, and Judah abode in tents, and Joab, and the King's servants, were encamped in the open fields. 2 Sam. 11. 11.

AND it seems highly probable that the Ark, thus brought to Saul, when in camp, and the Ark that was with Joab, at the siege of Rabbah, was the same that belonged to the tabernacle, which the Israelites carried from Egypt with them; because, after the building of Moses's tabernacle, it was unlawful to have made any new one, in imitation of it.

IF it is asked, whence the Israelites had an ark, a tabernacle, Cherubim, and the presence, or the supposed presence, of Jehovah in, or between; those Cherubim? toward the resolution of that question it must be considered, whence the ancient nations had their Cistæ, their Arks, their Images, their Teraphim, their Tabernacles, their Temples; because the origin of both will, very probably, be found the same.

THE account, given us by Moses, of the publication of the Gospel, after the Fall, is very short, and concise, tho' the Revelation may, in itself, have been very full, and explicite. Hopes of mercy given are recorded in that single sentence, the seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent: and we hear of no other symbolical thing, institution, or exhibition, except only the placing, or inhabiting, the Cherubims, to the eastward of Eden, upon man's being removed out of it.

THE Jews, who have misconstrued the Angel Jehovah into a created angel, have thought fit, here, to understand, by the Cherubims, two of the same sort of Angels, who had got a flaming sword, amongst them, to frighten Adam from re entering Eden, and meddling with the fruit of the tree of life; and this monstrous story they have made out of a text that, necessarily, means no such thing, and may fairly be construed to a sense big with the most important information to mankind.

FOR, in the first place, what the Jews and we translate to keep the way of the tree of life, with intent to prevent the coming at it, may as properly be rendered to observe, or for observing, and so discovering, or finding out, the way to the tree of life; and every body knows that the word way of heaven, way to life, in the Greek, as well as Hebrew learning, means to arrive at happiness.

IN

IN the next place, what we commonly translate flaming-sword stands in two several Nouns, not joined by construction, flame and sword, which last means nothing more particular than a killing weapon.

AND in the last place, the word we translate placed Cherubims is, almost always, in every other text translated inhabited; and whether you translate it placed, or inhabited, the next word ought to be translated the Cherubims, as things or emblems well known to those for whom Moses wrote. So that Jehovah's placing or inhabiting these Cherubims, where there was also the appearance of fire, and sword, was the method, chosen by him, to make the way to the tree of life kept, or observed.

NOW, as the established method for atonement and propitiation, the known way to the tree of life, was by employing fire in burnt-sacrifice, and the sword in shedding blood, both which must be done before the faces of Jehovah, residing in or between the Cherubim, what hinders us to conclude that the exhibition mentioned by Moses was, to the symbolical institution and service, afterwards established amongst men, the same that the patterns shewed to Moses, and to David were of the tabernacle, and temple, that afterwards were erected; and that Adam, and, in him, mankind was thereby instructed to shed blood, and offer burnt-sacrifice, before the faces of such symbolical figures as were then represented? Surely, if the shedding of blood, and offering by fire, were then instituted, as we are pretty sure they were, the manner would also be directed. And, as we know, from the history of Cain, that Jehovah chose a place for his more immediate presence, called his faces, we cannot possibly doubt that directions must be given with what symbols that place was to be adorned, and how it was to be distinguished: nor can we reasonably hesitate to pronounce that the symbol of his presence was the Cherubim, the place where, in the Jewish œconomy, he most certainly dwelt, and where in the very text in question, he is said to inhabit.

IF then this emblematical representation was exhibited, immediately after the Fall, to express and keep in perpetual memory the Revelation of mercy to man, by the blood and suffering of that perfect human sacrifice, who was to be joined to the second Person in the Deity, and to redeem and govern those that served, and trusted in him, we can clearly see the extent of God's goodness from the beginning, gining, universally, to all mankind; and we can perceive how the Jews came to have a tabernacle, and an ark, with proper emblems, before that made by Moses; and how the Nations came by their symbols, of the like nature; which in process of time they mistook, misapplied, and altered, when their corruption and imagination had once led them astray.

FOR if, in that emblematical service, the symbol of the presence of the Deity was necessary, towards performing sacrifice, as well as the emblem of the great sacrifice, the great intercessor, &c. then it became necessary for men, when, by multiplying, they were forced to extend their quarters, and to people distant regions, to carry some symbol of the divine presence along with them, in order to the sacrificing acceptably, every nation, agreeing in the same service, must have one; and every family, so long as the right of exercising the priesthood remained with the first-born, must also have one, else that right would be of no benefit; and if they lived in the itinerant, Nomade way, they must have a tent, or tabernacle, for placing those symbols in, as well as means of transporting them: as, on the other hand, if their seats were fixed, so as to suffer them to erect houses for themselves, they naturally would find houses, temples, for those symbols.

NOTHING was more common than Household-Gods among the antients. Laban had his Teraphim, which he calls his Gods, and about which he was extremely solicitous; Rachel had no less respect for them than he. The Heathens carried their Gods along with them, whithersoever they went. The idolatrous Israelites had, probably, in the wilderness tabernacles for their Gods Chiun, and Remphan. The cause of making the golden Calf was, probably, compliance with this custom. Aneas is commended for the pious care of carrying his Gods, his Dii Penates, from Troy to Italy, tho' what the form of them was is not known. Every family had their Penates, their Dii Lares, tho' in latter time they forgot what form these antiently were of. Teraphim, Penates, Lares, are all plural names for the representations of those Family-Gods; and, laying those circumstances together, it is impossible to doubt that the making these representations, amongst the different nations and kindreds, owed its origin to one and the same cause.

IT was because of the many corruptions introduced into the sacred service, in practice as well as in opinion, that the Jewish œconomy was instituted; and it was because the permission of every head of a family family to be Priest, for his own house, and to sacrifice according to his own will, had introduced the greatest uncertainty, as well as error, that the first act towards establishing the Jewish liturgy was the abrogating that right, the depriving the first-born of all pretence to shed blood, and transferring that right to the family of Aaron.

IT was for the same reason, and to the same intent, that sacrifice of all sorts was prohibited, except before the faces of Jehovah in the tabernacle first, and, then, in the temple. In the wilderness no Israelite could lawfully kill a clean animal, for private use, in any other place except before the tabernacle; and tho', when the people had fixed seats in the land of Canaan, distant from the faces of Jehovah, they were permitted to kill of the flocks, or of the herds, for domestick use, provided they did not eat the blood or the fat, yet still, under the strictest menaces, they were prohibited to sacrifice, for fear of the abuses that might ensue.

THE very prohibition, together with substituting the Levites in place of the first-born, and the change that was thereby introduced in the precedent practice, which all mankind but the Jews continued in, shews sufficiently what was lawful and regular before that prohibition; and the circumstances, above taken notice of, sufficiently shew the occasion and meaning of it.

MUCH of the same kind, and nearly for the same reason, is the prohibition to make graven or molten images to represent Jehovah, to fall down before them, or worship them; to erect altars, statues, or pillars, for religious service. Abraham, &c. built altars; Jacob anointed a stone, which he had set up, and called it Bethel; and doubtless the practice of both was laudable, and, but for the prohibition in the institution given by Moses, each might have been lawfully practiced by the Israelites in Canaan, as well as their sacrificing before the faces of Jehovah might have been imitated. But, after all religious service, the whole symbolical representation of the grace of God to mankind was confined to the tabernacle and temple, then what was lawful to be done, elsewhere, became unlawful; and, as it was impossible, after that period, to sacrifice any where but before the faces of Jehovah, the symbols of his presence, in the holy-place, it became unfit to make, or to have in reverence, those symbols (which were only expressive, as they were joined with sacrifice) any where else, except when a Prophet had immediate direction, or in cases of necessity.

THE prohibition, then, is to Israel, that they should not make unto themselves graven images, the similitudes of any thing in the heavens above, or in the earth beneath, &c. that they should not bow down to them, nor serve them; that they should not take upon themselves, wantonly, to assimilate God to what their imaginations might suggest to them he was like; by the practice whereof mankind had already run into so many ridiculous, and miserable errors. But this prohibition does not, in any degree, imply that the Deity might not continue the use of the sacred symbol of his personality and grace, in the merciful act of redeeming mankind, in the Holy of Holies; no more than the inhibition to sacrifice, at large, prevented sacrificing in the temple. And, if it be said that the actual institution of sacrifice, at the altar, shews the prohibition to sacrifice was not absolute, it may also be said that the command to frame the Cherubim is as express, as that to burn Holocausts at the altar.

IT is, indeed, true that the prohibition extends to prohibit all religious worship, even to the sacred emblems in the holy place; an extravagance into which the idolaters had fallen, and that may be a main motive for forbidding the very making, or having, such emblems in private hands; but then there was no danger of that abuse in the temple: the symbols were placed there not as the objects of worship, but as descriptive, in some degree, of the manner of the act of grace, as it was to be brought about by the persons in the Deity, for mankind. The presence, that was to be worshipped, was to be looked for between those symbols, or emblems, upon the mercy-seat; and the cloud, and the glory issuing from it, called away the attention from those representations. Besides that, to prevent abuses from imagination, and all attempts of worshipping, these sacred figures were kept in the innermost part of the tabernacle, and temple, to be approached only once a year, and that by the High-Priest, on the day of Expiation.

THAT this was the apprehension of the Israelites, of those times, is evident from the conduct of their successors, who could not well fail to be acquainted with their notions; and who might think that ordinances of this kind, intended to take place in a state of quiet and tranquility, when all the people had free access to the tabernacle, or temple, might be superseded, in case of absolute necessity, when the pious could not have access to present themselves at those places.

Micah, who lived in the time of the Judges, certainly feared Jehovah; the silver, belonging to his mother, was dedicated to Jehovah, to make an Ephod, and Teraphim, &c. when he succeeded in getting a Priest, to his mind, he concluded that he was certain Jehovah would do him good; and this Ephod, and Teraphim, evidently were prophetick.

HIS scheme, then, manifestly was not to revolt from Jehovah, nor to serve idols, or other Gods; but, whilst the confusion and oppression of Israel made it impossible to attend at Shilo, to have a house of God in his own family, with sacred symbols, and a Priest, who, before the faces of Jehovah, in that place could make atonement by sacrifice, whilst communication with Shilo was obstructed.

HE, therefore, made an Ephod, and Teraphim, in imitation of the approved symbols; and, having them set up, had Jud. 17. 5. Beth Elohim, a house of God: the Translators, imagining that the Teraphim represented false Gods, have rendered the words Beth Elohim a house of Gods; tho', chap. 18. 31. they render the very same words, when applied to the tabernacle in Shilo, the house of God.

As the service, for which this Ephod, and Teraphim, this house of God was intended, could not be performed without a Priest, Micah, who it seems was not himself a first-born, consecrated one of his sons, probably the eldest, for that office, for want of one more fit; but meeting, at last, with a Levite, he engaged him to serve in that station, and consecrated him, in full belief that this action would be acceptable to Jehovah.

AND, accordingly, we see Jehovah was propitious to this pious, tho' irregular, design. The Ephod, and Teraphim, consulted by the Danites about the success of their undertaking, returned a true answer; which so far raised the esteem of the Danites for those sacred Symbols, that they robbed Micah of them, and set them up in their own country, where they continued in reputation till the Captivity.

Micah, complaining of the injury done him in taking from him the Teraphim, says they had taken away his Elohim, his God. It is difficult, if at all possible, to imagine that Micah, who set up those figures to do service to Jehovah, could have meant any more than that the Teraphim were the Symbol, or representation, of the Elohim, necessary to be used in the chief act of religious service; and, if that shall be the construction, the resemblance between Teraphim in private vate service, before the Mosaick Law, and Cherubim, in the publick service, after it, is pretty observable.

IT was, in all appearance, for the same reason, and to the same end, that Gideon, a servant of the true God, who had seen the Angel Jehovah, to whom Jehovah had spoken, to whom, and by whom, Jehovah had wrought wonders, made an Ephod of the golden spoils of the Midianites, and set it up in Ophrah, his city, whither the Israelites, in process of time, ran a whoring after it, and where it became a snare to Gideon, and to his house.

THAT this Ephod had Teraphim, and all the proper appurtenances, as Micah's had, attending upon it, is not to be doubted; and it is remarkable, that Gideon's act is not censured for any inherent malignity in it, but only for the consequences of it; as the Ephod he set up, in process of time, debauched the people, and became a snare to him, and to his house.

THESE instances, pretty plainly, shew that Teraphim were no more than a copy of the original Cherubim, applied to the same uses that the Cherubim were on the mercy-seat: and as all mankind agree, from many clear proofs, that the Teraphim were images, or representations of what the antients took to be expressive of their Deity, it can hardly be questioned that the Cherubims were intended for the same purpose.

SUPPOSING this to have been the case; as the very exhibition must have been intended to represent Trinity in the Deity, and the share each Person had in the salvation of man, it is impossible the Jews could have rejected the belief of the Trinity, and with it the Messiah upon his advent, so long as they retained the memory, and the understanding, of that hieroglyphical representation. But as it was fixed in Providence that they should disbelieve the one, and reject the other, their wild imaginations, whilst the figures remained in the temple, led them to neglect all reflection upon them, and to run after false Gods; and this necessary piece of knowledge, towards understanding the system of grace, dropt so totally out of their heads, or rather they had framed notions so contrary to it, that, upon their return from the captivity, the Ark and Cherubim had no room in their temple; tho' these were the very kernel of all their religious ceremonies, and tho' the knowledge of the figures of the Cherubim was preserved by Ezekiel, a Prophet allowed by themselves to be inspired, as the dimensions and fabrick of the mercy-seat was by Moses.

THAT

THAT the shutting up those figures in the Sanctum sanctorum might have contributed to the loss of the knowledge of their form, amongst the Jews, may be true; but then, if they had not been described by Ezekiel, that loss would have been total, and irreparable; and we, as well as they, should be deprived of the benefit of that representation, to evidence the original and permanent design of the merciful Deity; but as the loss of the ideas, which ought to have resulted from that representation, answered the end of God in the hardness of the Jews, so the preservation of those sacred figures, by Ezekiel, serves to convict the Jews of that hardness, to render them inexcusable for their infidelity; and, at the same time, to confirm, and illustrate the faith of Christians.

THE form, and the meaning of the representation in the Cherubim is not the only piece of useful knowledge the Jews, to whose custody the sacred oracles were committed, have lost as to themselves; tho', in preserving the sacred books, they have providentially saved them for the benefit and instruction of those who were called, to be the people of God, in their stead.

IT has been already observed, that there is a particular emphasis, which the Jews will not see in the plural Elohim, used always in scripture to signify God; and it is uncontestable, that the word itself carries some idea in it descriptive of some character some relation, the Being described bears to Man.

THE word Jehovah the Septuagint translates Kύριος, and we, after it, Lord; because of the delicacy of the original interpreters, who might think it some sort of prophanation to translate that sacred word, and make it common in its known meaning. Neither Jew nor Christian doubts that Jehovah expresses the Essence that necessarily exists; and every body knows that it does not mean what Kύριος properly signifies; the Greek word is a faithful and just translation of Adoni, which the superstitious Jews have placed in the room of Jehovah; it signifies Dominus, Lord, Master, but carries nothing in it of the idea of the Original.

THE idea resulting from the word Kύριος, Lord, is relative, and bears a particular regard to subjects, servants, without which the idea of Lord cannot subsist; but the idea arising from the word Jehovah is absolute, bearing no relation to any thing but itself, an-standing fixed, and determined, by itself, subsisting tho' nothing besides did exist.

AND, therefore, we can reasonably say my Lord, thy Lord, his Lord, our Lord, their Lord, the Lord of the land, &c. and those expressions are often used in scripture; but we cannot say my Jehovah, thy Jehovah, &c. and in fact there is no such expression in the whole sacred book: and, when we translate my Lord, thy Lord, &c. the word translated is never Jehovah, but always Adoni, or some other word of the same signification.

As we discover the idea conveyed by Jehovah to be absolute, so we perceive the idea implied in Elohim to be relative by the use of it; nothing is more common than my, thy, our, their, his, Elohim, which never is said of Jehovah; and, as the word has some signification of relation, the Translators ought to have expressed it by a word that bore some such sense.

BUT as they have erred in rendering the absolute word Jehovah by the word Lord, which carries an idea significant of relation; so they have erred on the other hand by rendering the word Elohim Θεός, Θεοί, God, Gods; which, so far as we know by the derivation assigned for it, has nothing significant in it, at least carries no idea of relation to us, or to any other thing.

IF the word Θεός, or the word God, have no significant meaning in themselves, and are made use of, as sounds, only to raise the idea of the eternal Being; then the applying that word by the relatives my, thy, &c. is improper; the eternal Being, absolutely considered, has no more relation to one, than to another; and, if the term Θεός had originally any signification of relation, by all we can discover from the Greek antiquities, it was lost long before the Septuagint translation; nor do we know what the precise meaning of the Saxon word God was, other than to denote the supreme beneficent Being.

THE Jews, therefore, ought to have translated the word Jehovah by a word of the same signification, or at least to have rendered it totidem literis, if they could not find a word of the same import; and they ought not to have translated it by a word that has another and a different meaning; and they ought not to have translated Elohim, which most certainly had a signification of relation, by a word which had no signification at all of relation affixed to it. On the contrary, they ought to have kept up, in the translation, to the true meaning of the word, or to have retained the Hebrew term, totidem literis, in the translation, as they did in proper names; for then, tho' they must have left men in the dark, they would not have misled them, nor done the mischief they have done to their successors.

WITHOUT

WITHOUT enquiring whether the loss, or the concealing, of the meaning of this word proceeded from folly, or faultiness, or from a mixture of both, in the Jews, it is highly necessary to search, in order to the recovery of it; knowing the genius of the Hebrew language to be such, that significant words are framed from roots that yield some certain, fixed, idea, and thereby convey a determined meaning.

IN looking over the radical words of the Hebrew language one finds the root Elab to mean an Oath, or Adjuration, the Execration made to affect the breaker of a covenant; and the genius of the language certainly admits the word Elab to be used, from that, to signify a person that hath taken upon him this oath, and Elohim to denote more persons become subject to it, or entering into covenant, or agreement, together.

THAT Elohim should be formed, from this root, to signify persons under the obligation or execration of an oath, may seem, at first sight, somewhat hard; but that notion will become more familiar when one considers that Jehovah, throughout the sacred scriptures, is said on many occasions, in confirmation of any promise, or covenant, relating to a future event, to swear; to swear by himself, to swear as Jehovah liveth, in order to create absolute certainty, and reliance on the performance.

WHY Jehovah is thus represented as taking an oath, and what the nature and manner of that oath may be, merits a distinct consideration; but since, in fact, he represents himself to us in that light, as binding his promises by oath, we may easily conceive why he may choose to be called, and considered, as the God bound by oath, the Being solemnly engaged under an immutable obligation, by those who are to believe in, and rely on his promises.

THO' we have no footsteps, so far as I know, left of this signification, in the terms which the Greeks, or Romans, or other later heathens, made use of to signify the Deity, yet the Greeks had their Jupiter Ἰουπιτερ, and the Romans their Jupiter Fæderator; and nothing was more common, amongst those heathens, than the notion that the supreme God could bind himself by oath; nay they describe, with fictitious circumstances, the particular oath that was immutable. Here, again, is an instance of a very extraordinary notion, very far from being deducible from the light of nature, pickt up, and maintained universally, amongst the most ancient nations we know; which tallies wonderfully wonderfully with what the sacred book, of which they knew nothing, exhibits; and must, therefore, have flowed from the same original.

IF we admit that Elohim carries the notion of Fæderatores, Beings or Persons in Alliance, bound by oath to make their engagement effectual, then we evidently see why they may, are, and ought to be, called my, our, their, &c. Elohim; why Jehovah describes himself by the title of the Elohim of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jacob, of Israel; why they call upon him as their Elohim; why, in their praises, they ascribe to their Elohim power, goodness, faithfulness, beyond the Elohim of other nations; and why the leading encouragement to the Israelites, to do well, is, that Jehovah is, or will be, their Elohim, and they are, or shall be, to him a peculiar people; as, on the other hand, if they broke their covenant, the Elah, the oath or execration would reach them.

AND, surely, if Jehovah was pleased to make, or to represent himself as making, a covenant for the benefit of mankind, or of any particular people, by which he was unalterably bound to redeem and preserve them, on their performing certain conditions, the most kind, and, at the same time, the most useful appellation he could choose to be addressed to by, is that of Elohim, in the notion of Fæderator; because it could not be pronounced, with attention, without raising the most thankful sentiments of the mercy and goodness of God, joined to the strongest confidence in his favour; and, at the same time, warning the party of the danger of transgressing, by non-compliance with<sup>d</sup> the conditions to which he, on his part, was bound.

IF Elohim was a term peculiar to Jehovah, as God of Israel, with whom he plainly appears to have been in covenant, the reason of that appellation would be pretty obvious; but so it happens, that he is called the Elohim of the whole Earth; and, in the description of the Creation, the works performed by the Eternal are said to be done by the Elohim, and all the antient nations admitted the term Elohim as descriptive of their God. So that it will be a strong objection against this sense of the word Elohim, if no reasonable account can be given of an earlier covenant than that with Abraham, and if that covenant did not extend to all mankind.

WHOEVER believes that there are three persons in the Deity, whereof one became bound to join himself to humanity, and perform

compleat righteousness, and give compleat satisfaction for the sins of mankind; one became bound to assist man, thus redeemed, to do his duty, and to reform his heart; and one became bound to accept of this satisfaction, and, upon receiving it, to admit man to fellowship and favour; will not scruple to allow that, before even the creation, a covenant, or agreement was made to this purpose between the sacred three, in the event of man's falling: and he will be the less scrupulous to admit this, when he considers several texts that suppose it, particularly the 110th Psalms, v. 4. which says, Jehovah hath sworn, and will not repent, thou art a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchizedek.

BUT, whatever may be thought of this; as none, who considers and believes the scriptures, can doubt that this covenant was made known to the first man, on the fall, if that term Elohim was consecrated for his information and comfort, it would pass current amongst all mankind, his descendants; and that would sufficiently authorize Moses, in describing the creation, to make use of the term Elohim, ascribing to Jehovah the Elohim, upon whose fidelity all mankind were to depend for salvation, the creation of this system, and of man.

AND tho' Moses does not, formally, relate that Jehovah acquainted man, immediately upon the fall, of a covenant made for his salvation; yet several passages, as recorded by him, shew that mankind had early knowledge of this covenant. For, in speaking to Noah, both before and after the flood, Jehovah says he will establish his covenant with Noah, and with his seed; not using the word that is, commonly, translated to make a covenant, which would have been done if no covenant had been made before; but making choice of an expression that presupposed a covenant, formerly made, and known to be made to Noah, who was made sure he was to reap, after that declaration, the benefit of it.

AND if one enters into the belief that this covenant (which gave birth to the appellation Elohim) was made by the Elohim, from the beginning, and was intimated to mankind, upon the fall, when the purpose of mercy was first revealed; and when, for explaining and recording that purpose of grace, the whole emblematical institution was appointed, and the Cherubim were exhibited, he will readily admit that the position of the two Cherubs, with their faces looking towards each other, and at the mercy-seat, where the blood for atonement atonement was to be sprinkled, might represent the Elohim, as parties in the act for making a covenant, looking and relying on each other for the performance, and regarding the blood, which was the emblem of the consideration for which man was to be redeemed: and this opinion he will the more readily give into, when he recollects that the ark, which supported the Mercy-Seat and the Cherubim, the principal emblems of the Jewish religion, is most commonly called the Ark of the Covenant.

As the Jews cannot be pardoned the losing the sense of the word Elohim, they can hardly be forgiven their plain endeavour to hide the original meaning of the word, translated, covenant.

THAT Berith, the word so translated, does not, in its original sense, signify covenant, is evident from this; that the formal phrase made use of to signify the making a covenant is, precisely, to cut off, or slay, Berith; much in the same way as icere, percutere, ferire, fœdus, is, amongst the Romans, to signify the making a covenant.

Berith, therefore, in its original signification denotes something that was to be cut off, to be slain; and Moses Exod. 24. 8. after having, as the symbol of the covenant, concluded between Jehovah and the People, divided the blood of the sacrifice into two equal parts; and, after having sprinkled the one half on the altar, sprinkled the other half on the people, saying, behold the blood of Berith, which Jehovah hath cut off with you, concerning all these words. and Zech. 9. 11. Prisoners are set free by the blood of the covenant, Berith.

THE latin Literati very truly assign the rise of the phrase ferire fœdus, when they say, that in all leagues, covenants, and agreements, it was the ancient and original custom to slay some victim, to sacrifice; whence, mentioning the solemn act, the slaying the victim, in common usage came to signify the whole act of making a league to which it was applied: But they fail in assigning an adequate reason for the ceremony of slaying any animal, at treaties, which again must have given rise to the form of speech in question.

IT has been already observed, that the blood of the Redeemer, who, in due time, was to be cut off, was the consideration of the original covenant between the Elohim, and between them and man; and the cutting off, and sprinkling the blood of a type, a creature substituted in the room of the Redeemer, till his real advent, was the Symbol of that Covenant used, even by Jehovah, in making Covenants with men, as in the instance at Sinai; and, therefore, used by all all men when they entered into solemn agreements with each other. Cutting off a creature, then, in a particular manner, or under a particular character, being the symbol of that important covenant, it is no great wonder that men, in their solemn engagements with each other, should make use of that sacred act; and that saying, shortly, that such creature, by such name or character, was cut off, should, in common usage, signify that a covenant was made.

THO' these reflections may give some reasonable satisfaction why cutting off, or slaying, a victim was used in making covenants, yet it is still necessary to enquire what particular character the thing, called Berith, bore to distinguish it from common victims in ordinary sacrifices, and to appropriate it to the use of binding covenants; since there is no appearance, after the most accurate search, that Berith was the name of any sort of animal used in sacrifice.

IN examining carefully the Old Testament two passages, and no more, are to be met with where the Jews have not ventured to translate the word Berith covenant, but have been necessarily obliged by the context to give it its true, original, signification; tho' to divert the Reader's attention, and to prevent his making any inferences from the sense of the word, in these texts, they have, in an arbitrary manner, pointed the letters so as to make the same letters, which in every other passage sound Berith, to be in these texts pronounced Borith.

Mal. 3. 2. The Angel of the covenant, of Berith, is said to be like the refiner's fire, and like fuller's, Berith, sope, and comes to purge and to purify. And,

Jer. 2. 22. Reproaching Israel for their wickedness and uncleanness, Jehovah saith, For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much Berith sope, yet thine iniquity is marked before me.

THESE passages, evidently, shew that the word Berith has in it the notion of cleansing, purifying, and the root from which, in that sense, it must rise is Bar, Barar, which signifies pure, to purify; and the word Berith, formed from that root, may signify properly purification, a purifyer, a person or thing fit to purify.

KEEPING in view this notion of the word, and recollecting that every thing was, under the Law, even the most holy things, to be cleansed, to be expiated, to be sanctified, by blood; that the pollutions of mankind were to be washed away by it; and that the blood, which thus cleansed, was but typical only of the blood of the real

purifyer, who, in the New Testament language, is to wash us in his blood from all our iniquities: Who can help concluding, that the great sacrifice to be cut off, in due time, was called Berith the purifyer, to signify the end of shedding his blood; that the representative beasts, the types, were called by the same name; that to slay, or cut off, Berith, or the beast representing Berith, the purifyer, being the very sign, or symbol, of the great the original, covenant for the salvation of mankind, which was to be repeated for confirmation of solemn covenants amongst men; the term or expression of cutting off Berith, or the purifyer, came in process of time to signify the act to which, amongst men, it was applied, the making a covenant; the word Berith retaining, nevertheless, its original signification, and being to be taken in that sense, when the scope of the text requires it should?

UNDERSTANDING the matter thus, many passages, that otherwise are extremely obscure, if at all sense, become clear and significant. Isa. 42. 6. I Jehovah will give thee for a Berith, covenant, of the people, and for a light of the Gentiles. 49. 8. I Jehovah will give thee for a Berith, covenant, of the people to establish the earth. If what is translated covenant, were rendered, as it ought to be, purifyer, nothing could be more clear and comfortable than those texts.

UPON the same principle the blood of Berith, the covenant, will signify the blood of the purifyer, without excluding the notion of that blood being the seal, and symbol, of the covenant.

AND, in like manner, in many passages where Jehovah, instead of using the word, translated to make a covenant, uses other words which signify, establishing, giving, placing, his Berith, covenant, to, or with, any one, the word Berith may more properly mean the purifyer, than the covenant.

Gen. 6. 18. When Jehovah acquaints Noah that he is to destroy the earth, with all its inhabitants, he assures him, at the same time, that he is to establish his Berith with him, and his family. Now, if Berith be taken, in that place, for the purifyer, the promise amounts to this, that the great purifyer was to come of his Line, which happened accordingly.

IN the same way, Gen. 17. 2. Jehovah says to Abraham, I will give my Berith between thee and me. And v. 4. As for me, behold my Berith, covenant, is with thee. And, if by Berith, in those expressions, is meant the purifyer, then these are formal declarations that that the Messiah was to come of Abraham, which explains the other declarations, that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed.

AND that declaration in which David so much exults, in what is called his last words, 2 Sam. 23. 5. yet he hath placed with me an, or the, everlasting Berith; will signify that Jehovah had decreed the purifyer, the Messiah, should spring out of his house, tho' his house was not so right with God as he could have wished it.

≠ MANY more passages will appear in a very different light, from what they did formerly, upon taking the word in this sense, which may be the reason why the Jews, who mistook the true Berith, when he came in accomplishment of the Law, and the Prophets, have used much skill to hide the true meaning, which most undoubtedly was understood by their forefathers, after the death of Gideon, when Jud. 8. 33. they went a whoring after Baalim, and made Baal Berith their God, to whom there was a house, or temple, at Shechem, chap. 9. under the title of El Berith, or the God Berith.

WHETHER the Israelites or the Canaanites built this temple is not material, the God was, surely, of the manufacture of Canaan, who spoke the same language with the Jews, and expected purification as well as they, tho' perhaps after a strange manner. Baal, or El, Berith, translated the Lord, or God, the covenant will hardly make sense; but the Lord, or God, the purifyer might be a proper object of worship for those who were so fond of purification, as to cause their children to pass through the fire to purify them, and even to sacrifice their children, by fire, to atone for crimes, and avert wrath.

HAVING said so much for explaining the Hebrew phrase for making a covenant, it may not be improper to enquire a little into the origin of the Latin phrase ferire, icere, percutere, fædus, which evidently is of the same kindred.

WAVING the conjecture of the Grammarians that fædus might, in the old Tuscan language, have been used for hædus a kid, which again might be the animal accustomed to be slain, or cut off at concluding treaties; because it neither appears that hædus was antiently written fædus, nor that a kid was the regular sacrifice: I think it most probable that fædus, in the phrase in question, meant originally what the adjective fædus, a, um, means, at this day, vile, abominable, polluted.

Now, it is certain that in the Hebrew language the sacrifice gained its name, from the end for which it was offered; a sin-offering is called, briefly, Sin; a trespass-offering, a Trespass; wherefore the victim, brought for a sin-offering, is called, without any addition, a Sin. Hence a man is directed to bring his sin, if a creature, the type of that Person who was to stand in the place of the sinner, to the door of the tabernacle, to lay his hand upon the head of his Sin; the Priest is to kill the Sin, to pour out the blood of the Sin, &c. without adding at all the word offering, to explain the meaning.

As, then, all religious rites flowed from the same source, and were instituted in the same language, it is very natural to conclude that, upon the formation of a new language, the expressions concerning those sacred rites would be framed in some conformity to the original language. Now if, in the first language, that which was offered for sin, which was to atone for it, and to purge it away, was, by those who expected that effect from it, called sin, why may not we believe that what was offered to purge, what was termed fedit, pollution, abomination, might be called fædus, if fædus, in the language of the country, signified fedit, pollution, uncleanness?

AND, if it is allowed that fædus might signify the creature offered to atone for sin, or uncleanness, then ferire, percutere, fædus, would be the very act of offering for sin, and must come to signify making a covenant, in the same very way that cutting off, or slaying, Berith does.

To these observations, which tend to shew the antiquity, and authority, of Revelation, and the true end and meaning of the emblematical, and predictive institutions, as well as of the terms in which the written will of God is conveyed, many more might be added; and these, already offered, might be supported by producing the passages from Authors sacred, and prophane, by which they are to be vouched: But, as on the one hand, this would exceed the design of these sheets; so, on the other, it would be but doing, over again, what is already infinitely better done by the ingenious Mr. HUTCHINSON, author of Moses's Principia, in that, and his other surprizing works, from whence all the thoughts concerning the antiquity of, and manner of interpreting Revelation are borrowed, and which are fraught with discoveries, as useful as they are new.

THIS Author has been complained of for writing in a manner that has been called abstruse and dark, and, perhaps, with some reason; but, but, if he is not altogether to be acquitted from that charge, sure there is no excuse for those, who, pretending to admit Revelation as Divine, will not give themselves the trouble to examine, with due attention, his Works, which make the Old Testament speak a language understood by our Saviour and his Apostles, and which hardly any body appears to have understood, since their days. It is scarce possible to pay too dear, in labour, and study, for such discoveries; and, if regard for Revelation were out of the question, it is amazing that curiosity does not prevail with men of leisure, and learning, to look into books that are stored with so much entertainment in that way.

IF any unprejudiced person, acquainted with the Scriptures, who has looked into the antient heathen learning, shall examine with tolerable care, those thoughts; it is to be hoped, he will find a ready answer to all the productions of modern, as well as antient, Infidels; and remain, to his great comfort, satisfied, That Christianity is, indeed, very near as old as the Creation.
